Dreamwold, Fairyland for Harvest Bride.

GLADYS LAWSON WEDS

MRS. EBEN BLAINE STANWOOD, GLADYS LAWSON, HARVEST BRIDE AT DREAMWOLD TO-DAY.

Eldest Daughter of State Street Leader Plights Her Troth at the Altar.

Special to the Boston American.

DREAMWOLD, Egypt, Oct. 11.—Miss Gladys Lawson, eldest and most beautiful daughter of Thomas W. Lawson, financier and author, to-day at noon became the wife of Eben Blaine Stanwood, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. Stanwood, No. 327 Beacon street, Boston. Dreamwold is garlanded for a harvest festival in connection with the wedding.

Mr. Lawson is personally in charge of the details of this event, beside which others in his life pale into insignificance, if one may judge by his appearance. To-day, before the time for the ceremony, he was everywhere about his beautiful place, with his own hands putting on the finishing touches in the arrangements.

Special trains from Boston brought to the Lawson place about 100 guests, who were landed on the Lawson side track at the specially constructed and decorated station, and were there met by carriages and immediately taken to the mansion on the hill. Miss Lawson's friends of the Vincent Club were greatly in evidence.

BIG FARM DANCE TO-NIGHT.

As a part of the festival a breakfast will be served to the hundred guests at the Lawson mansion, and to-night the gala day will pass into history with a great farm dance for the hundred employes and their friends. Here will appear the bride and bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. Lawson and the other members of the family.

Mr. Stanwood and the bridegroom's party of friends arrived early at Dreamwold behind a four-in-hand. They came down on the train to North Scituate and took the four-in-hand there. Other traps arrived later, but the greatest part of the wedding guests were due on the 10.40 special from Boston.

When the guests alighted at the station at Egypt, a glory of flowers, fruit and vegetables greeted their gaze. The home gate, with its tall white piers, rises from giant sheaves of corn and wheat, resting on a base of vegetables. The surmounting arch shows festoons of laurel, interwoven with clusters of grapes, apples and pears, and in the cop-nations. All the gates are similarly decorated.

The picturesque, winding drive which leads to the house is banked on each side with hay trees and hydrangeas in full bloom. The porte cochere repeats the laurel, fruit and vegetables scheme and long sprays of the vivid scarlet celastrus adds to the sumptuous color effect.

However, it is in the splendid great ebony hall that the decorations are most elaborate. Here red roses and greenery have been used in lavish profusion. Back of each of the eight electric light lanterns, which project from the wall, is a fan shaped shield of roses, while draperies of laurel roping and roses, are used at the shell-shaped entrance to the rear lawn.

From the centre chandelier festoons of roses and foliage radiate to the corners of the room, and on the ebony table beneath the chandelier is a cornucopia of American beauty roses in a curious vase formed of an elephant's foot and tusks.

The ceremony takes place in the spacious living room, which has been done entirely in white and green. Where the bridal party stands in front of the mantel, a canopy of lilies of the valley and ferns has been arranged, the edges meeting the bank of white chrysanthemums on the mantel.

Bride roses and lilies of the valley garland the ceiling beams, the valley small ball fastening the garlands at the intersecting points.

gardenias, cosmos and lilies of the valley have been placed in the deep window seats and various niches.

In the dining room the guests partake of a delicious wedding breakfast, served in a veritable garden of fruits and vegetables, with a straw horn of plenty suspended over the long mantel, arched by apples, pears, carrots—vegetables and fruit of every kind.

Paris Wedding Gown.

The bride, who is given in marriage by her father, wears a Paris wedding gown of white chiffon and rose point lace, with tulle veil and orange blossoms. She also wears one of her wedding gifts, a splendid diamond chain, from which is suspended a cross of diamonds.

Miss Marion and Miss Dorothy Lawson, as bridesmaids, wear gowns of white chiffon and carry Liberty roses. Little seven-year-old Bonny Lawson, in white en-

HEIRESS CASTS OFF COACHMAN HUSBAND, WHO FACES CHARGE OF BIGAMY

New Hampshire Officials Declare They Will Arrest Henry Gill on Sight for Alleged Bigamy in Marrying Cornelia Hatch Dearborn

After a honeymoon of three days, Cornelia Hatch Dearborn, society girl and heiress, of Boston and New York, who married her coachman, Henry Gill, has cast him aside, and is now heartbroken at the home of her mother in Montclair, N. J.

Meanwhile a warrant charging the coachman bridegroom with bigamy has been issued, and he will be arrested on sight if he returns to New Hampshire.

"He deceived me cruelly," the bride of three days says. "I loved him with all my heart, but I will never forgive him now."

Steps have already been taken to annul the marriage, Mrs. Dearborn-Gill having been informed positively by Mrs. Flora Blackburn-Gill, the first wife, who lives in Franklin, N. H., that this second marriage is illegal. It was this first wife, Mrs. Blackburn-Gill, who swore out the warrant for her husband's arrest.

THINK GILL IS IN NEW YORK.

Gill has disappeared, and it is believed that he is now in New York. When last seen he had a large sum of money, presumably a gift to him by the bride, and boasted of his power to get more. He is being sought now by High Sheriff George A. Kimball of Merrimac County, N. H., who says:

"I will arrest Henry Gill on sight. We have absolute proof that he is a bigamist; the proof that his first wife, with whom he had lived while he worked for Miss Dearborn, has furnished. We can prove that Gill married Miss Dearborn under an assumed name, Barry Walker, Jr."

Mrs. Blackburn-Gill is determined to press the charge of bigamy when Gill is arrested. There is some question if the prosecution could be undertaken against Gill in New Hampshire because of the fact that the bigamous marriage took place in Brookline, but there is no question that he could be prosecuted here.

STEPS FOR ANNULMENT.

Mrs. Dearborn-Gill is now at the home of her mother, Mrs. Emily Dearborn, No. 2253 Grange road, Montclair, N. J., according to leased wire dispatches to the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day. There it has been announced that actual steps looking to the annulment of the marriage have been taken.

"I learned to love this man," Mrs. Gill admitted in an interview. "He seemed so good and kind, so attractive, that I thought he was a splendid young man in regular of his occupation. That he was a gentleman did not occur to me for him. But I will never forgive him now," she sobbed. "I will never forgive him for his cruel deception in the practical jokes he had practised upon me. Just as soon as I became convinced he really had another wife and that he had deceived me, I consented to have steps taken for the annulment of the marriage."

Mrs. Gill is very popular in social circles in Montclair. She went to her mother's home soon after the wedding and refused the step she had taken, and it was only a few days after this that word came to her that her husband had another wife and a little boy living in New Hampshire.

Warrant Is Held Up.

The warrant for Gill was sworn to before Justice of the Peace Robert W. Bennett of Franklin, N. H. In it Mrs. Flora Blackburn Gill declared that on October 5, 1905, in Brookline, Mass., Henry Gill unlawfully married as Miss Cornelia Dearborn of New York, notwithstanding the fact that at the time his lawful wife, Flora Blackburn Gill, to whom he was married on October 14, 1900, was living and un-

AMERICAN LEAGUE GROUNDS, Philadelphia, Oct. 11.—Wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement, old Quakertown is agog, in the tails of the worst symptoms of baseball fever that was ever known.

On every hand there is evidence of the mania prevailing because of the strife over the third game of the world's championship, which is booked to-day.

The Giants won the first game, the Athletics the second, and now comes the break for the odd point, an advantage that will have much influence on the final outcome.

The situation is the same as if the series was to begin all over again, and the ultimate result seems just as far off as when the team lined up for the initial game.

From New York came a large percentage of the population, delirious with the idea that the Giants were in the ascendancy, and like liberal Gothamites were ready to put up the coin on their pets, and made no bones about it.

There was a damper on the fans' ardor early in the day as a drizzle promised to spoil the sport and the field was made slightly heavy, but

Of the nine commissioners to be chosen Boston is entitled to five, Chelsea two and Winthrop and Revere one each. The Democratic commissioners will join with an equal number of Republicans in apportioning the districts. The Boston Democratic commissioners will be chosen from these candidates: Andrew J. Peters of Ward 23, Edward Seaver of Ward 21, Arthur W. Dolan of Ward 5, Daniel V. Melanae of Ward 15, Richard Sullivan of Ward 18, William J. Power of Ward 20, Fred J. Kneeland of Ward 23 and Malachi L. Jennings of Ward 16.

The district attorney convention will name the present district attorney, Michael J. Sughrue, as its candidate. John B. Moran, who is a candidate for the office, will not allow his name to go before the convention, preferring to run independently, his last used nomination papers.

FIVE BAY STATE GIRLS IN PLAY

Eight Fall in First Round of Big Golf Tourney at Morris County Links.

CONVENT STATION, N. J., Oct. 11.—Massachusetts' chances to carry off the national women's golf championship on the Morris County links now depend on five players. Of the thirteen women from the Bay State who qualified in the preliminary round for the match play, eight fell in the first round. Those remaining are Miss Mabel Adams of Brae-Burn, Miss Margaret Curtis and Miss Harriet S. Curtis of Essex County, Miss Pauline Mackay of Oakley and Miss Grace B. Keyes of Concord.

With its representatives reduced to five the Massachusetts contingent still has strong hopes of winning. Miss Mackay, one of the first round survivors, is the Massachusetts State champion. She was obliged to defeat one of her own State players, Miss Elizabeth S. Porter of Brookline Country Club, to stay for the second round. She beat Miss Porter 6 up and 5 to play. Miss Margaret Curtis is another strong player, likewise Miss Harriet S. Curtis. The latter had a close call with Miss E. M. Burry of Apawamis, winning 1 up in 19 holes.

Other formidable survivors of the first batch round include Miss Grace Brown of Bridgeport, Ct., the present Connecticut champion, and Mrs. C. T. Stout of Atlantic

A. F. OF L. IS AGAINST BOYS' TRADE SCHOOLS

State Branch Accepts Legislative Committee's Report After Attack by Delegate Maloney.

ANCIENTS ARE RAPPED

By Frank K. Foster.

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 11.—The comedy and the tragedy of the workaday world manifest themselves upon the floor of a labor convention.

Here are finds an exhibition of human faith in ideals, combined with naive self-interest, odd conceptions of the powers of the State over the individual, half baked theories of a social millennium and sacrificing devotion to principles, odd quips and turns of speech as some earnest soul painfully labors to put thought into word, awkwardness and unskilfulness, combative and the forensative spirit, the ardent and the judicial temperament—in brief, all the faults and virtues of miscellaneous humanity.

The second day's session of the State branch convention started off with the consideration of the recommendations of the legislative committee. Delegate Patrick Mahoney of Boston, who is also incidentally the candidate of the Socialist party for Lieutenant-Governor, trained the radical guns upon the recommendations and advocated the dismissal of the committee. After an hour's warm discussion the committee, by a practically unanimous vote, indorsed the report of the committee, Delegate Mahoney alone being recorded in the negative. This action was important, as defining the position of the committee, the vital issues, that of trade schools and legislative action.

As to the first named subject, the convention says "no state schools where there may be brought in to learn trades," but all the opportunities possible for industrial and technical education for those already in the trades. As to legislation, it is proposed to enroll the trade union membership with pledges to support only legislative candidates, irrespective of party, who are in favor of the agreed upon legislative demands of organized labor. This will give a body of 150,000 voters pledged to the success of certain measures, foremost among which stands that of direct legislation.

Protest Against Chinese.

A strong protest against the repeal of the Chinese exclusion act was registered, the delegates holding that the Federal business means the lowering of the American standard of living.

A brief executive session was held to consider the printers' eight-hour contest, during which plans were matured for material assistance to the typos. President Gompers was also asked to be present at the printers' conference to be held in Boston on the 22nd inst.

Ex-Mayor Quincy of Boston was given a very cordial reception when he appeared before the convention in the afternoon to speak for the plan of legal protection for labor in which he was interested. He was accompanied by his former secretary, Thomas A. Mullen.

By far the most spirited debate of the convention occurred over a resolution endorsing the work of the New England Civic Federation, which stands for the best of the radicals. Debate on the question had not concluded at the hour of adjournment.

Practically the entire old board of officers was nominated for re-election without opposition, there being two candidates only for the office of fourth vice-president, the aspirants being Delegates Hurley of Brockton and Durnin of Holyoke. For the legislative committee there are numerous aspirants.

Headquarters in Boston.

It was voted to establish permanent headquarters in Boston and to change the date of the annual meeting from the second to the day in August. This change will give ample time before the State election to use the pledged voters for the defeat of opponents of labor legislation.

The federation will strongly urge an increase in the force of factory and boiler inspectors. It is asserted that the present force is entirely inadequate for the work to be properly done. The proceedings in the case of the late Brockton horror were characterized by a delegate as a revelation as "one of the most flagrant cases of whitewashing in Massachusetts history."

The employers' liability measure introduced in the Senate last year by Senator Taylor was strongly endorsed.

Delegate Brown's resolve demanding that the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company be divested of its peculiar exemption from jury duty went through with a whoop.

The Harvard scholarship fund of the Boston Newsboys' Union was given a send off with a contribution and endorsement.

The various committees have their work well in hand but two days will be required to clear up the docket.

SPEAKER NIXON OF NEW YORK IS DEAD

WESTFIELD, N. Y., Oct. 11.—S. Fred Nixon, speaker of the New York State Assembly, died at home here.

He was taken ill a short time ago with what seemed to be appendicitis. Mr. Nixon apparently was improving when a sudden turn for the worse came. An operation was performed and he seemed to rally from it. Since then, however, his recovery had been retarded only by the unwillingness of the wound to heal.

HEARST TO RUN FOR MAYOR AS INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE

Will Accept New York Nomination if Tendered at Thursday Night's Convention.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—William Randolph Hearst has decided to accept the nomination for Mayor as an independent candidate, representative of the decent citizenship of New York, which, during the last few weeks, has been shamed by a series of political manoeuvres unparalleled in this city of rotten political cliques. He will run if nominated by the Municipal League convention to-night.

Ever since Mr. Hearst returned from Europe he has been besieged by delegations representing all sorts of organizations and all conditions and manner of men, urging him to accept an independent citizens' nomination. His uniform answer was that he was not a candidate, had not been a candidate and that some one else should be the people's standard bearer in this fight.

At the hastily arranged mass meeting at the Grand Central Palace last Wednesday the plans of the Municipal League upset, Mr. Hearst was nominated from the body of the hall, his nomination was seconded by half a dozen organizations and he was unanimously named as the proper man to lead the fight.

Is Urged to Run.

The committee to carry out the will of the convention—which was to induce Mr. Hearst to run if possible—was appointed by Chairman J. G. Phelps Stokes. This committee waited on Mr. Hearst and earnestly urged him to accept the nomination. Mr. Hearst again declared his unwillingness to run.

He said there were many men more competent to lead the movement, and declined the nomination. The committee besought him to set forth his views in writing, declaring that they had no right to not take "No" for an answer.

Mr. Hearst still hoped the Republican party would put in the field a ticket that all good citizens could vote for. The nomination of Charles E. Hughes gave promise for a short time that a respectable man could be supported on a nonpartisan basis. Mr. Hughes's declination destroyed that hope.

In the meantime, Mr. Hearst was daily visited by delegations asking him to run, and he received hundreds of letters from all over New York, to the same purpose.

Judge Samuel Seabury, the chairman of the committee appointed at the mass meeting last night, informed the committee of seventeen appointed at the Astor House conference that Mr. Hearst had finally decided to accept, provided the convention on Thursday night nominated him.

Judge Seabury explained that Mr. Hearst had come to this decision only because there was no other in the field in opposition to the Murphy ticket, and he was willing to make any sacrifice in the interest of decent government. Senator Ford at once said:

"This ticket will win beyond a question. A hundred thousand Republicans of the rank and file will flock to the support of Mr. Hearst.

"Every Independent Democrat and thousands of Tammany Hall adherents will welcome the opportunity to show their confidence in Mr. Hearst and will loyally support him," said former Representative F. B. Shober, who three years ago carried a strong Republican district—the eighteenth—for Congress by a handsome plurality.

"Mr. Hearst will have the united support of all the Independent organizations throughout Greater New York," said Alfred J. Boulton of Brooklyn.

To Prepare Platform.

A tentative platform was presented by Chairman Martin on behalf of the subcommittee of five, the provisions of which met with the approval of the committee. It was recommended that a committee, to be empowered to confer with the Municipal Ownership League with a view to the framing of a platform that will be accepted at the Carnegie Hall meeting, be appointed by the eight organizations represented.

The committee adjourned and will report to the Astor House conference to-night.

He appealed and furnished bail in $100.

Miss Hickey denied that she was being hugged. Also she charged Raymond used violence toward her and tore her shirtwaist.

HEARST TELLS WHY HE WILL LEAD FIGHT

Text of His Letter to Judge Seabury Accepting the New York Mayoralty Nomination.

My Dear Judge Seabury—I thank you for the honor which you confer upon me, and for the confidence expressed by the committee and those whom you represent.

I have felt absolutely unable and unwilling to accept the nomination you have offered me, but I have at length decided to defer to your wishes and not to shirk a task that presents itself to me as a public duty.

The situation in this city is so grave, and the conditions of the public in the face of organized bossism is apparently so helpless, that no man has a right to consider anything else, least of all his private affairs or personal inclination.

The one thing to be considered is the necessity of giving to the people an opportunity to vote for some man of whom it may at least be said that he would, if elected, represent those that voted for him, and not any boss or corporation, or selfish private interest.

If your convention believes that I am such a man I shall accept the nomination. It is intolerable, in view of the recent exposures of the Gas Trust and the insurance frauds, that the interest of the citizens be allowed to go by default.

The Gas Trust robs the city and all the citizens, and yet it is proposed to re-elect the man who signed the Remsen bill, to make the monopoly of the trust permanent and unassailable.

The amazing life insurance revelations prove that the policy-holders are robbed, and show in detail how corporations bribe the bosses of both parties in return for corrupt legislation and license to evade the law.

The machinery of government in this city is in the control of a boss whose fortune is based on contracts awarded by corporations in return for special favors and illegal privileges.

The subway, which was owned and built by the city, has been given away, and is managed in utter disregard of the health and comfort of the public, the welfare of business men or the rights of employes.

An organization for plunder has planned to secure and exploit all new subways and all surface railway franchises, and has arranged a political combination to make it impossible for the people to protect themselves, and bad as the situation is to-day, it is as nothing to the four years' riot of corruption that would follow an entire triumph of dishonesty in public affairs.

Such a prospect is a menace to the prosperity as well as to the good name of the city, and is a threat against the material welfare of all the people. Under these circumstances a man asked by his fellow-citizens to represent their interests and the honor of the city has no right to refuse.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

FRAUD CHARGED TO POLICEMAN

Sergeant Gordon of Cambridge Accused by Report of Aldermanic Board.

Police Sergeant Herbert Gordon, who has been active in prosecuting men accused of naturalization frauds, is put under fire himself by the report of the Cambridge Aldermen who have been investigating the police department of that city.

The report recommends that the six sergeancies be abolished and six more men be put on patrol duty. In regard to Gordon, the committee recommends that the sergeant be fined $150, and that he be fined to him "in continuance of duty." It is charged by the committee that Gordon took money by false and fraudulent pretenses. It says:

"The claim of Officer Gordon was that in the accident at Mrs. Coughlan's house he had injured his left shoulder only, and that there was no injury to his right wrist previous to the injury at the corner of Hampshire and Prospect streets, but in our opinion the fact was amply proved by witnesses who testified before us that the only injury which he had with on the night of December 31, 1903, at Officer Counihan's house, was an injury to the right wrist, and his failure to disclose this fact to the committee on claims was a fraudulent concealment.

URGE ACTIVE WARFARE ON CHILD LABOR

Federation Committee Favor National Agitation for Better Conditions.

INSPECTION SYSTEM BAD

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 11.—The report of the committee which has been investigating the subject of child labor in Massachusetts factories, and the election of officers, were the principal matters which occupied the attention of the delegates at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Federation of Labor to-day.

Joseph G. Jackson of Fall River, first vice-president, submitted, on behalf of the Child Labor Committee, a report which, after reciting forth the attitude as found in this State, makes recommendations in the interest of the fight against employment of children in factories.

The report declares that the latter should be considered by the national as well as the local body, and recommends that the incoming National Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor should be instructed to communicate with the different State branches of the organization with a view to starting a national agitation.

The State laws of Massachusetts regulating the employment of children, the report says, are liberal and something that the citizens of the Commonwealth can justly be proud of, but "as much cannot be as truthfully said of their enforcement." It adds: "The factory inspection system of Massachusetts is both inadequate and insufficient."

"These faults are not so much because of the personnel of the board, but rather on account of the lack of force and help employed by the board is not large enough for the thorough enforcement of the law." The committee recommends the introduction of a bill at the next session of the Legislature calling for the reorganization of the factory inspection system.

LEFT BODY TO BE DISSECTED BY PHYSICIANS

George W. Catt, Woman Suffrage Leader and Rich Man, Makes Strange Will.

TO AID MEDICAL SCIENCE

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—One of the strangest wills ever devised by a man of eminence has resulted in the taking of the body of George William Catt, late president of the Atlantic Dredging and Construction Company, after full funeral ceremonies, to the Bellevue Hospital Medical College to be dissected for the benefit of science. Mr. Catt, president of the American Woman's Suffrage Association, and member of nearly a score of clubs and scientific organizations, died Sunday at his home in the Osborne apartment house, No. 25 East Fifty-seventh street, of a complication of diseases which for years defied the skill of the best surgical and medical men in this country and in Europe.

He had enormous wealth, but could not buy the knowledge necessary for the preservation of his life, and eight years ago, determined that if such maladies as his could ever be cured they must first be thoroughly understood, he made the will in which he declared:

It is my wish that my body be given to the medical college in which anatomy and surgery are taught nearest to the place of my demise, to be used by it in such manner as will be most conducive to the advancement of medical and surgical knowledge.

Three years after making this remarkable will Mr. Catt was married to Carrie Lane Chapman, of Seattle. His wife respected the will of her husband, recorded in the will, and had the arrangements made for yesterday's sealed transfer of the body from her handsome apartments to the gloomy room where to-day it will be cut to pieces by surgeons in view of hundreds of physicians and medical students.

YANKEE NAVY 'ROTTEN,' SAYS BERLIN PAPER

German Article Exposes United States Claim as Great Naval Power.

ARMY WORSE THAN CZAR'S

BERLIN, Oct. 11.—The Neue Preussische Kreuz Zeitung to-day prints what it calls an expose of the claim of the United States to be a great naval power. The article asserts that the American army is "rotten," and that two per cent. of the soldiers deserted during the year 1904. The army is made up of miserable material, and according to the newspaper the Russian army is superior to that of the United States.

"Americans are patriotic with their mouths, the paper says, but they are unwilling to become soldiers in behalf of their own country, and they despise soldiers as a career. The United States possesses sufficient wealth to build 100 new battleships, but it is impossible to man them, as neither officers or crews exist.

The article further states that American naval officers are all too old for the respective ranks they hold. Ten of the admirals are over sixty years of age and the average of the naval captains is fifty-seven years, as compared with forty-eight years in the English and German navies. The American navy, it is asserted, will not bear a close inspection.

O, my luve's like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June;
O, my luve's like the melodie
That's sweetly played in tune.

As fair art thou, my bonnie lass,
So deep in luve am I:
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
Till a' the seas gang dry—

Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
And the rocks melt wi' the sun;
I will luve thee still, my dear, ptre frock with a lace cap trimmed in blue ribbons, and with the daintiest of blue shoes and stockings to flower girl.

Mr. Stanwood has Mr. Eben B. Barstow for his best man, and for his ushers, Mr. Arnold Lawson, by Lawrence Oliver, Mr. F. M. Stanwood, Jr., Dr. J. M. Little, Jr., Mr. Philip Proctor and Mr. C. H. McDuffie.

The Rev. John Suter of the Church of the Epiphany in Winchester officiates. The music will be most elaborate, Mr. Arthur Hyde presiding at the organ and the choir of Emmanuel Church singing bridal hymns.

Mrs. Lawson's gown is scarcely less lovely than the bride's, being a Worth creation of cream-colored blonde lace over liberty satin. She wears the famous Lawson pearls, consisting of a rope four yards long of perfectly matched gems, said by experts to be the most beautiful collection in America, and valued at fully $350,000.

For the wedding breakfast L'Africain's orchestra plays, and the following menu is served:

Canteloupe.
Clear Bouillon.
Terrapin Baltimore.
Yellow Legs in Aspic.
Salad.
Fruit and Ices.
Coffee.

Mr. Stanwood takes his bride to Europe for a six weeks' honeymoon trip.

Father's Favorite Daughter.

Those who know the Lawson family well say that the eldest daughter of the house, the bride of to-day, is the favorite child of her father. Lawson, who idolizes his entire family, would probably deny the existence of such a word as favoritism when speaking of his children. However, it is certain that, in feature, manner and character, Gladys Lawson is more like her father than any of the others, and between the two there is a delightful understanding and affectionate comradeship. Gladys Lawson has been a close companion to her father ever since she was a baby.

She shares his love of sport, of nature, of art, of flowers. She looks on him as the best father and cleverest man in the world. She rejoices in all his triumphs and suffers more keenly than he when disappointment comes to him. The Gladys Lawson carnation, with its price of $30, 000, has ever been her favorite flower. The failure of the Independence to lift the cup was quite as bitter a sorrow to her as to her father. In the victories of the Lawson stables and kennels she feels a personal pride. A clever horsewoman, she appreciates a good horse, with the appreciation of an expert.

There is no more thoroughly attractive young woman in all New England than Gladys Lawson. To begin with she is a decidedly pretty girl, tall and broad-shouldered and well rounded in figure, with a well poised head, a sweetly serious face and a frank cordiality of manner. Her hair is blonde, her dark-lashed eyes a deep, true blue, her coloring exquisite.

Indulged in every way by her parents, used to every luxury which money can buy, she is quite unspoiled, simple, unaffected and sensible.

And the man that she is to marry is just exactly the sort of man her dearest friends would choose for her life partner. Eben Stanwood is the sensible, ambitious, clean-cut type of young American, who is making the future of the business world.

He is a graduate of Harrard, and extremely well placed socially. While his father is not a tremendously rich man, as wealth is counted in these days, he is one of the substantial business men of Boston. His influence could have placed his son in some business position, where life would not be so very strenuous and remuneration generous. But Eben Stanwood is not the sort of chap who would care to get ahead through pull.

"I believe in every man standing on his own feet, making his own way, and working out his own happiness," is what he avers as his view of life.

He works hard all day for the Hotel and Railroad News Company. And after his wedding journey he will continue to spend his working hours at the Sullivan square office.

He shares Miss Lawson's love of nature and sport, and although the handsome Beacon street house, included among the wedding gifts, will be their home, they will probably spend much of their time in the country.

After the young people have departed to-day, Dreamwold will be the scene of a farm dance given by the bride to the farm people and their friends.

It will take place in the splendid carriage hall, which has been banked with laurel, red oak, maple, and hydrangeas.

The ceiling will glow with the soft light from hundreds of Japanese lanterns, and small red wedding bells will sway from the beams. In the alcove a supper will be served from tables decorated with Bride roses and Lawson carnations.

Lawson and her fiance, Eben Blaine Stanwood, assisted in extinguishing a fire in a grocery store in Egypt. By their prompt action several surrounding houses were saved.

They were out driving, and when in front of the store were startled to hear the cry of "Fire!" Miss Lawson seized the reins and stopped the horses. Telling Stanwood to help save the store, she turned the team about and drove rapidly to Dreamwold, her father's estate. There she gave the alarm, and the fire department of the farm manned the hose wagon and rushed to the fire.

Meanwhile young Stanwood and others in the village had been doing heroic work as a bucket brigade. Stanwood was on the roof pouring water on the blaze when his fiancee returned. She praised him heartily for his work.

The fire was caused by the explosion of a lamp. The damage will not exceed $500.

HURTS FATAL TO CHAUFFEUR

As a result of injuries received in a collision between an automobile and an electric car, Louis E. Zerlas of Albany, N. Y., driver of the automobile, died to-day at the Newton Hospital. Senator George F. Fulford of Brockville, Ont., owner of the machine, and J. C. Hannon, a friend of the Senator's, who were both hurt in the crash, are still at the hospital, but are reported to be rapidly recovering.

The collision occurred at the bottom of a steep hill on Beacon street. At the foot of the hill are the tracks of the Boston & Northern trolley line. Buildings on the corner prevented the driver of the machine from seeing an approaching car into which the automobile crashed.

DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN TO OPEN TO-NIGHT

General Bartlett and Whitney to Speak at Big Rally in Tremont Temple.

REPUBLICANS ALARMED

To-night the two leaders of the Democratic State ticket will are but shed into the ranks of the Republicans. The opening rally of the campaign will be held in Tremont Temple and the principal speakers will be General Bartlett, candidate for Governor, and Henry M. Whitney, candidate for the second place. Chairman W. T. A. Fitzgerald of the Boston Democratic City Committee, will preside, and the rally will be held under the joint auspices of the city and State committees.

Mr. Whitney will discuss the tariff and reciprocity features of the campaign, and General Bartlett will take up the other issues set forth in the two platforms. The band will play before the rally and in the intermission between the speeches of the candidates. It will probably be about 8:15 o'clock when Chairman Fitzgerald calls the meeting to order, as he and other members of the city and State committees will previously attend the county and district attorney conventions at Faneuil Hall.

To Unite on Sughrue.

Leaders of both committees are in favor of the nomination of District Attorney Sughrue. They are also interested in the selection of commissioners to act as a contesting board, whose duty will be the laying out of Suffolk county into new representative districts.

John B. Moran will not seek the regular Democratic nomination for district attorney, but will run as an independent candidate. He has secured the necessary number of signatures to his papers to insure a position on the official ballot.

That the Republican leaders are scared over the defection of the reciprocity element of the party is apparent. Daily conferences are being held with the candidates, and prominent workers from every section of the State have been summoned to headquarters to confer with the managers. Grafton Cushing, president of the Republican Club, is being consulted every day, and his organization will be asked to help the regular organization to a larger degree than ever before.

Hall Is for Whitney.

Ex-Mayor Hall of Cambridge has come out squarely for Candidate Whitney of the Democratic ticket and says many of the business men who feel they have been fooled by the tariff and reciprocity planks of the Republican platform and have been insulted by the remarks of Senator Lodge, will vote for the Democratic ticket.

They will not only vote on the ticket, but will work for it with all their might, says Mr. Hall. This drive against the Republican candidate for second place has resulted in a special appeal from the State Committee, in the form of a circular to the faithful, to aid the entire ticket.

DOUGLAS IS HEARTILY FOR STATE TICKET

Governor Warmly Indorses Municipal Ownership Plank and Praises Nominees.

Governor Douglas to-day gave an emphatic indorsement of the Democratic State ticket. His first callers this morning were Judge Henry N. Sheldon and General Charles W. Bartlett. The former was nominated for the Supreme Court by the Governor and the latter for the office the Governor launched with words of the highest praise by the Governor. The Governor leaves in the morning for Hot Springs, Va. He will return on the twenty-fourth. Speaking of the Democratic ticket and platform Governor Douglas said:

"The work of our State convention was in every way admirable. Our platform is clear-cut, bold, understandable, particularly so as is the tariff plank, which declares unequivocally for the putting of hides, iron, coal, lumber and wood pulp upon the free list. The tariff plank in the opposition platform is an elastic, evasive, meaningless one. It is capable of differing results, intended to please both the standpatters and the tariff revisionists. The result, it seems to me, must please nobody.

"It was very kind that our convention went on record as favoring municipal ownership and good business management.

"Another very strong plank in our platform is that favoring of free industrial instruction for our children.

Grateful for Approval.

"Naturally I am grateful for the approval of our administration. It was also entirely fitting and entirely merited that the Democratic party of this State should commend the diplomatic courtesy and courage of President Roosevelt in exerting his influence to bring about a termination of the war between Russia and Japan.

"General Charles W. Bartlett, the nominee for Governor, is a capable, broad-minded, public-spirited citizen, and our party was indeed fortunate to secure the consent of a man of his type to head our ticket.

"And right here I want to emphasize the fact that as far as I know General Bartlett was not interfered by any 'machine' or 'boss' in his nomination. It is this kind of a man and he is an independent in turn of mind, and, if chosen Governor, he will be in fact as well as in theory the chief executive of the whole people, and not the representative of a single party or faction at a party.

"In the selection of Henry M. Whitney as a candidate for Lieutenant Governor we were no less fortunate than in the choice of General Bartlett.

Praise for Whitney.

"Mr. Whitney is a well-known and successful business man. He is a good representative of those 60,000 Republicans who are fighting for free hides, lumber, iron ore, wood pulp and reciprocity with Canada and other nations.

"Every man on our ticket from top to bottom is capable of satisfactorily filling the office for which he has been named. Our party is well prepared to wage an energetic campaign, and I have every reason to believe that our candidates and our platform will appeal to the public more strongly than last year."

BANKER H. H. COOK DIES.

LABOR UNIONS JOIN LEAGUE FOR MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Sheet Metal Workers' Union, More Than 400 Strong, Declares Itself.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP LEAGUE.

Ward ..... City .....

I, the undersigned, enroll myself a member of the Municipal Ownership League of the city in which I reside. I pledge myself to use every honorable effort to bring about the municipal ownership of public utilities. I believe that city lighting plants to supply the needs of the city and the citizens as well is one object to be attained.

The attempt now being made to elect a Legislature which will pass measures permitting the establishment of an electric railway monopoly in Massachusetts and granting exclusive franchises to a favored syndicate shows the necessity of a prompt and concerted movement for public ownership by all citizens, irrespective of party.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Cut this out, sign it and mail it to the Secretary of the Municipal Ownership League, No. 80 Summer street.

If you desire to take part in the formation of a municipal ownership club in your ward or city, write to the Secretary of the League for blanks and for information as to the best manner of forming a club.

The labor unions are joining the Municipal Ownership League. The first one to declare itself was the Sheet Metal Workers' Union, No. 17. This is one of the most important unions in the Greater city, having a membership of more than 400 people. Other unions have signified their intention of becoming members of the league.

John F. Kennedy, the business agent of the union, makes this emphatic statement in favor of the municipal ownership of public utilities:

"From statistics gathered by experts and students municipal ownership of public utilities has been a grand success in all European cities where it is in vogue, consequently from an honest trade unionist standpoint I can not but be heartily in favor of it.

Panacea for Existing Evils.

"More efficient service, saving in price and humane and just treatment of employes are but few of the advantages derived by the community from this great system. For too long has an innocent public suffered injustice at the hands of unscrupulous corporations, granted franchises by dishonest legislators, who have betrayed the people's trust.

"Party politics should cut no figure in this great fight and everybody seeking the suffrage of the people and pledged to the support of this twentieth century movement should receive the enforcement of organized labor at the coming election.

"To-day is the opportune hour for our deliverance from the octopus which seeks an everlasting franchise. Let us tarry not longer, the remedy is in our hands. The panacea for cabling evils is municipal ownership."

Dr. Herbert J. Keenan, of No. 254 Broadway, South Boston, a school committeeman, says:

Closer to the People.

"One of the many good features of Municipal Ownership is that it will bring the government closer to the people, where as at present the tendency is from the people and into the hands of a financially powerful few. Legislation will then be in a larger measure for the people and not almost wholly for the large corporate interests.

"The avenues of profit and loss will be honestly stated and more open to public scrutiny so that the tax payer can get a better insight into the way affairs are handle the government's money and loss.

"Years of toll have brought neither tariff reform nor other measures desired by the people. Municipal ownership will help to bring it about more quickly and surely than other economic theories put into practice and it will be a decided improvement over the methods of the past."

Representative William L. Newton of South Boston has this to say of the municipal ownership of public utilities:

Interest in Public Affairs.

"One thing is certain, and undisputed under the present system, which for the most part is that of private monopoly and public regulation; we send many men to the legislature, some morally unfitted, others not intelectually qualified to represent us properly, and this class of representatives naturally be trusted properly to assist in regulating private monopolies.

"On the other hand, under a system of municipal ownership of public utilities the people would surely take a keener interest in the administration of their affairs and consequently in the character of their representatives than they do at the present time. If this is true, and it certainly is reasonable to assert that it is true, municipal ownership would, itself, bring about the very condition which is necessary for its success; that is, a more lively public interest in public business and more efficient representation.

"The opponents of public ownership admit that, with honest and intelligent representation, public ownership would be of incalculable benefit to the people. We should get less graft, on the other hand, however; if the public will send men to public office who are strong enough to resist temptations which will be offered to influence them to vote against public ownership, they will then have men in whom other interests are perfectly safe.

"Each vote for public ownership is itself in an absolute indictment of the fidelity of the representative. There is no valid reason why the millions which are now going into the coffers of private monopolies should not be directed into the treasury of the city and used for much needed public improvements."

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Troubles by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and health. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another. I gave up smoking, I quit coffee and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy but never took any stock in advertised medicines nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store and took two or three tablets after each meal and ocasionally at a bubble between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health and before two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy asking for information as to what the tablets contained and they replied that the principal ingredients were aseptic pepsin (governments test), malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been on the market only a few years, probably every druggist in the United States, Canada and Great Britain now sells them and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

CANDIDATE FOR CIVIC CONTROL

TAUNTON, Oct. 11.—On a municipal ownership platform, George A. Sweeney of Attleboro, a Democratic candidate for senator from the First Bristol District, believes he will defeat other candidates in th senatorial fight.

At a meeting in Social Hall in accepting the candidacy, Mr. Sweeney sharply rapped political bosses and ring rule. He said:

"I shall fight to the last ditch for municipal ownership. I believe in all its branches.

"This nomination has been given me with no strings attached. I look upon this district as I would on a large business house or corporation. Every cent should be guarded for the rights of the people. Every citizen should get dollar for dollar.

"I believe in home rule. I believe every city and town in the Commonwealth has sufficient intelligence to manage its own affairs. Each town should own its own street railroads and lighting plants, and I shall fight until this district buys such plants and whatever else it can secure.

HEIRESS CASTS OFF COACHMAN HUSBAND, ACCUSED OF BIGAMY

Coachman Gill's Wife, Who Has Obtained Warrant for His Arrest on Bigamy Charge, and Their Son.

HARRY GILL MRS. HENRY GILL

Cornelia Hatch Dearborn Declares She Was Grossly Deceived by Him.

vorced. She prays that he may be apprehended and held to answer for his offence.

Immediately after the filing of the complaint in the office of County Solicitor Thomas Clifford the warrant for the arrest of Gill was placed in the hands of George A. Kimball, sheriff of Merrimac County.

A consultation was held by the solicitor and sheriff, as they were in doubt as to whether or not an action could be begun in New Hampshire for a crime committed in Massachusetts.

Deciding that they could not proceed legally, Sheriff Kimball held the warrant while Solicitor Clifford conferred with Attorney-General Eastman.

After the conference Solicitor Clifford announced that neither he nor the sheriff would take any action for the present.

CRIME WAS IN BAY STATE.

Said Attorney-General Eastman, in support of his advice to let the matter rest for the present: "I do not see that there is any ground upon which a proceeding can be brought in New Hampshire, because the crime of bigamy, charged in the complaint, was committed in Brookline, Mass., and not in this State. No other crime is alleged, and it seems clear that whatever action is taken must be by Massachusetts authorities."

From their life of obscurity and quiet, Flora Blackburn Gill and her father, Fred Blackburn, have been brought into the light of publicity, and neither of them relishes it.

When either appeared on the street, people stopped and stared at them, with the result that both decided to remain indoors. Through information furnished in the foregoing statement, Mrs. Flora Blackburn Gill declined, and in her refusal her father backed her up.

HOW THEY MET FAMILY.

Speculation is rife as to the whereabouts of Gill. His friends doubt if he has the hardihood to go to his latest wife, now that this exposure of his life has been made. But of one thing they feel certain, that he is hastening from the boundaries of New Hampshire and of Massachusetts, or perhaps of New England, with all possible speed.

Apparently what most impressed his former associates, whom he treated to a wedding feast, was the bundle of money Gill held when he arrived here, and the result that both decided to remain indoors. Through information furnished in the foregoing statement, Mrs. Flora Blackburn Gill declined, and in her refusal her father backed her up.

Speculation is rife as to the whereabouts of Gill. His friends doubt if he has the hardihood to go to his latest wife, now that this exposure of his life has been made. But of one thing they feel certain, that he is hastening from the boundaries of New Hampshire and of Massachusetts, or perhaps of New England, with all possible speed.

Apparently what most impressed his former associates, whom he treated to a wedding feast, was the bundle of money Gill held when he arrived here, and the result that both decided to remain indoors. Through information furnished in the foregoing statement, Mrs. Flora Blackburn Gill declined, and in her refusal her father backed her up.

Mid-week by the good things to eat and to drink at the wedding feast Gill talked of the wedding and of his happiness which followed.

Directly after leaving the rectory of the Rev. Dr. Stone they came directly back to Boston and took a train for New York, it is said. This before boarding it Gill sent a telegram to Mrs. Dearborn, his new mother-in-law, in New York, asking her to meet them alone at the Grand Central Station.

This Mrs. Dearborn did, but she elected to ignore the request to meet them alone, and brought her son, Fred Dearborn, with her.

As Mrs. and Dr. Dearborn stepped forward to meet them descending from the train Gill introduced Miss Dearborn to them as Mrs. Henry Gill.

In horror the mother looked at them, unable to grasp the fact that her daughter, on whom she had lavished her love, had married her coachman.

And then, bitterly, she said to her coachman son-in-law: "Henry, I am sorry you ever came into our empire."

But Dr. Dearborn, being more philosophical, said: "Well, mother, what can you do about it?"

To the grief-stricken mother and brother Gill protested that he loved the girl. But he neglected to tell his friends whether or not he also told them that he had a wife in Franklin.

With great vehemence he announced that the girl loved him, and he repeated to his guests that he loved her.

He also said that although he and his former employer's wife were to live with Mrs. Dearborn in Montclair, N. J., it really made no difference what the family said or did, for he and his wife had plenty of money.

ADVANCE CASE OF MRS. ROGERS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Attorney-General Fitts, of Vermont, has entered a motion in the Supreme Court of the United States for the advancement on the docket of the case of Mary Rogers, under conviction by the Vermont courts on the charge of killing her husband at Bennington in 1902.

He said that if the case should not be disposed of before December 5, next, great delay must necessarily result, because of the conflict of the state and federal laws.

The motion was opposed by Mrs. Rogers' attorneys.

RYAN MAKES FIERCE ATTACK ON LOMASNEY

Says Latter Threatened Him With Vengeance for Report on Harrington.

WANTS LATTER DISMISSED

John A. Ryan of the School Board made a sensational attack last night upon Martin Lomasney of Ward 8, when he offered a minority report in regard to the charges made against Master Walter L. Harrington of the Washington school. The majority report exonerated Harrington from the charges made by Attorney Robert L. Silverman. Silverman has been retained, upon Harrington's complaint, upon the charge of criminal libel.

Silverman took his charges to the school committee, and they were referred to a sub-committee, of which Mrs. Julia Duff, sister of Harrington, is a member, but she took no part in the hearing.

In fighting the adoption of a report exonerating Harrington, Ryan said at last night's meeting of the School Board:

Would Drive Him Out.

"Lomasney told me that unless I joined the majority report he would drive me out of town. 'I have driven other men out of Boston and I'll drive you out,' he said. 'He explained that he wanted Harrington's brother Arthur for political work in Ward 8 later in the campaign.

When Lomasney was asked, after the meeting, to reply to this, he said:

"I know nothing about the Harrington matter. If Ryan can get any notoriety by using my name he is welcome to it."

The majority report was signed by Messrs. Badaracco, Kennedy and Scandlend, exempting Harrington from all of the five charges preferred.

Wants Master Dismissed.

The Ryan report recommends that Harrington be dismissed no longer to continue as a master in the public schools of Boston.

Ryan wanted the matter taken up in executive session "in the interest of the fair name of Boston and its public schools. He said the evidence was of such character it should not be made public.

Mrs. Duff opposed an executive session for consideration of the charges against her brother. She said:

"Next to the man accused I am the one most to suffer, and I therefore assert that it is my positive belief that but for me, on account of me, these charges would never have been made."

"The man who made these charges," she continued, "had one credential. He was superintendent of the West End and Edmonston Union.

"This union was supported by James J. Storrow, openly an enemy of mine."

The matter was laid over until the next meeting.

Saleswomen's Peril

GRAVE DISEASES, DUE TO STANDING

Facts About Miss Merkley's Dangerous Illness and Complete Cure

Have you ever thought why so many women or girls rather weak in an hour than stand still for ten minutes?

Miss Margret Merkley

It is because most women suffer from some derangement of their delicate organism, the discomfort of which is less to bring what they are in motion than when standing.

In some states laws compel employers to provide resting places for their female employees.

But no amount of law can regulate the hard tasks of these women. They must get the strength which this work demands or run the risk of serious diseases and the supervision of Miss Margret Merkley, 275 3d Street, Milwaukee, Wis.:—

Dear Mr. Pinkham:—

"Gradual loss of strength, nervousness, bearing-down pains and extreme irritation compelled me to seek assistance. A doctor said I had ovarian trouble and ulceration of the womb, and advised an operation if I wanted to get well. I objected to this and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. I soon found that all the good things said about this great medicine were true. The ulceration soon healed, backache, headache and nervousness disappeared, and in a short time I was strong, vigorous and perfectly well. I wish every working girl who suffers would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a vegetable tonic which invigorates and strengthens the entire female organism, and no medicine of the same beneficial results in the case of any sick woman as with Miss Merkley.

WHOLE WORLD OF SPORTS COVERED FOR THE BOSTON AMERICAN BY ITS CORPS OF EXPERTS

BOWDEN CAR OUT OF RACE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—It would seem as if none of the German cars in the Vanderbilt race are to be hoodooed by number thirteen after all, nor even forced to use a huge letter "X," which had been the substitute identification marks which it was proposed should be painted on S. B. Stevens, Jr.'s Mercedes in place of the unwelcome baker's dozen numerals. The cup commission has finally decided that H. L. Bowden's ninety horse-power Mercedes could not be accepted as a substitute for Clarence Grey Dinsmore's car, because it had not been nominated by a member of the Deutscher Automobile Club. John B. Warden made the unpleasant discovery early yesterday that two of the cylinders of his Mercedes were cracked, and it is likely that but three German cars will start, bearing numbers 1, 2 and 5. Mr. Warden had drawn No. 9, but if he is unable to start, his number will undoubtedly be given to A. L. Campbell, who will drive the ninety horse-power Mercedes of S. B. Stevens, Jr.

The ignorance of nBale, H. L. Bowden's driver, concerning the course did not influence the refusal of the Bowden entry, judging from the remarks of one of the race officials yesterday. "Bale is one of the very best drivers in this country," said this official, "and the commission had no fear that his presence in the race would imperil either himself or any of the other drivers. The fact is that the car is now in process of being overhauled at a New York garage and it was not at all certain that it could be finished in time for the race. Some of its minor parts were made in this country, and that is why the commission felt compelled to refuse to accept it, along with the fact that Mr. Bowden is not a member of the German club."

An incident of yesterday morning which was distinctly gratifying to Americans was the showing made by Walter Christie with his front wheel driven racer. Wagner of the French team made three fast circuits of the course, during which Christie trailed him for many miles, despite the fact that but three of Christie's four cylinders were working. Wagner made the three laps in 1 hour 18 minutes 50 seconds, which is a sixty-five mile an hour rate for the 84.9 miles covered. When it is remembered that the best time for this distance in the elimination trials was 1 hour 32 minutes 36 seconds, Wagner's ride shows up very well. Salzi made four rounds of the course, 113.2 miles, in 1 hour 46 minutes, which is slightly faster than sixty-four miles an hour, and overshadows Dingley's time of 2 hours 50 seconds, in winning the elimination trials.

The Harvard Eleven lines up against Bates this afternoon at four o'clock on Soldiers field. The visiting team is lighter than usual, although they make up for the deficiency in speed and grit. The Harvard team will consist largely of substitutes as a number of the regular men were used up on the University of Maine game on Saturday.

Coach Reid of the Harvard football team, last night, gave the students the first idea of what he thinks of the team this fall. His prospects, what he expects, and the work he has been doing. It was before a mass meeting to practice cheers, etc. When Reid appeared in the Union, he was recorded the heartiest welcoming any man for a long time in Cambridge.

He told of the canvass of the university last spring for football material. There were 800 men who had played football. Of these 291 had some show to make the varsity eleven, and 90 of these reported at the opening of college, after three notifications.

"There are men in the university today, who are good men, whom we need, and yet they are not out," said Reid, "and hear of great strapping men, yet after a few days out, they drop off the squad. In fact, the material is not first-class; but I am pleased with the spirit every man in the field is showing.

Many Men injured.

"Another cause of discouragement is the number of men we have injured. At least six of our best men are out. We can't afford to lose any more. We are trying to establish a system here. It may take a college generation, but in four years we should have a team together, with better training than ever before. The ability, overcoming mistakes of the past. We are now building a machine of men and unknown, with which to meet another machine tested, proved and patented year after year.

"We are going to teach that team good football. If we lose by it. If there are rules, we must live up to them. If the rules are wrong we should change them. But that team is going to play under the rules as they are and play hard. There is to be nothing secret about the games. The team goes on the field to make as large a score as they can, and will do so all season.

Captain Hurley also spoke a few words, asking for continued good cheering. The songs were tried and the cheers, and over under the leadership of Captain Stephenson of the baseball team.

ANDREWS FIELD, Providence, Oct. 11.—Brown's football candidates lined up this afternoon for the former's fourth game of the season. The weather was just cold enough for good, snappy football, but rather disagreeable for spectators.

Brown expected to win the game by a large score, as Colby has not a very high rating in the football world, and it is showing thus far this season has not been anything alarming.

Colby expected to give the Hill boys a good argument, but their hopes of winning were rather shady. This is the first game that Brown will have, as the Colby varsity of Maine lickers come here on Saturday, and they may make some trouble.

YALE FIELD, New Haven, Ct., Oct. 11.—Yale tackled the Springfield Training School here to-day, hoping to roll up a bigger score than last season, when the team played Yale a 6 to 0 game. The team was lighter than last season, but played aggressive football. Trotter, Terry and Lea the were still unable to line up for Yale.

The fast work of Wylie, the freshman halfback from the fifth school, in practice yesterday, has led the coaches to decide to give him a trial in most of the games this Fall, as he was slated for the second half of to-day's game.

In the "Socker" Football Game Next Monday

ENGLISHMEN WILL PLAY HERE

The Pilgrims, an all star team of English Association Football players which has been on missionary work to teach the Americans the finer points of the "socker" game, are billed to play here next Monday at the National League grounds. Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, Bart., is director in chief of the aggregation, and is accompanied by Lady Kirkpatrick, who is a crack golfer and tennis player. The family seat of the Kirkpatricks is at Crawley, Sussex, where Sir Charles has ample facilities for indulging in his various sporting hobbies. The favorite amusement is association football, and for nine years he played with the Rodney Priory team, and captured the county cup seven years in succession, as well as representing London in numerous matches.

As a track athlete the English the English baronet has a record of eighteen firsts, one of the best of which was a quarter in Woking Club, is fond of boxing, wrestling, and is keen on cricket, golf, swimming, hockey, and sports and track tennis. On the team with Sir Charles are several young men of wealth, Fred Milnes, the captain, is the son of the largest cutlery manufacturer of Sheffield, and J. B. Barnsdale of Notts Forest is the son of a big lace manufacturer of Nottingham. Other members of the team are: L. W. Stoney, Corinthians; Vivian J. Woodward, Tottenham Hotspurs; R. B. Hounsfield, Derby County; G. Coupland, Sheffield; T. Fleetwood, Derby County; E. A. Milton, Saltley College; J. A. Raine, Sheffield; A. Bryning, W. H. McNuttal, F. S. Walmsley and F. O. Wright.

Landed in Canada.

On September 2 the party landed in Canada and began a tour of the Dominion and only met one defeat. This occurred against the Berlin Rangers of Ontario and the result was characteristic of the way athletic contests are often decided in Canada. The teams were playing under the association rules prevailing in Canada but the referee happened to be a secretary of the Rangers Club, and his ideas on most of the rules were rather befuddled. Now and again he would stop the game to consult with Captain Milne when a knotty point presented itself. Once the referee got Captain Milne away from his position and practically set upon play, but the Canadians kept on playing with the ball, and finally sent it between the goal posts. Then the Canucks joined in a goal and the referee said, "Gentlemen, that goal didn't count, but it has also." The Rangers were credited with the score against the protests of the English players, but sooner than have any trouble the visitors played on, and of course lost. Sir Edward the Englishmen visited Detroit, Chicago and St. Louis, where big crowds witnessed their matches with the local teams. At St. Louis they played two games and on the first there was an attendance of 11,000 persons and at the second there was 20,000. What amazed the visitors most was that wherever they went they met champion teams. At Toronto had the champion team of America, as had Detroit and Chicago, and the Pilgrims could not understand the situation.

Of late years the association game has proved wonderfully in popularity throughout the British Isles, and experts are of opinion that it is only a matter of a few years when it will become the universal game of British athletics. Interscholastic matches in England it is a common occurrence to have 30,000 spectators watching the game, and crowds of sixty, seventy and eighty thousand are frequent. Not long ago in the final of the cup ties at the Crystal Palace, London, a crowd of 100,000 persons were present, and this completely eclipses the gate attendance figures of the big matches in America, or, in fact, football crowds in any other country in the world.

Secret of the Game

The secret of the game is that it is entirely free from the roughness of tackling, gouging, butting and other tactics of the Rugby game, and people who see it once are fascinated ever afterward. Women, too, can attend the association matches without having to face the revolting spectacle of bloody noses, blackened eyes and broken limbs. A few years ago an Irish writer—the late Joseph McCarthy—defined the three styles of football practiced in Britain thus: "Association—kick and ball; Gaelic—kick the man; Rugby—kick the man and the ball." Americans "mind the ball," and no American supplemented this with "American Rugby—kick the ball." Speaking of what they saw and offering a little explanation of the game, Sir Charles said:

"I never saw bigger crowds at matches than the ones we had at St. Louis and at Detroit. Yours is a great country for athletic sport. We are over here simply in a missionary spirit and are seeking to teach the States how to play our game as we play it, as until recently we may have annual international matches. We are not here simply to win games, only to instruct. Formerly the English game was very rough, but we changed it. Not because we were afraid of being roughed, but because the people like the scientific game better. The women wouldn't turn out to see the old Rugby games, but since we adopted Association they come in great crowds, and that is why we have such tremendous turnouts in England at the match games. We heard, that of St. Louis, where Association is becoming very popular, they were going to rough us, but they didn't. Either they did not intend to or they found when they tried to rough us that we wasn't going to be roughed, but had dodged away with the ball. The American players had great energy, but what we took most by surprise was how well trained it would take a better team than the Pilgrims to win over the States at the Association game."

WILL LEAD SOCKER TEAM

Owing to an injury to Squires the Harvard association football player who was to lead the All-Boston team against the Pilgrims at the National League grounds next Monday, the leadership has been placed with W. I. S. Thackers, another Harvard man and he will be the acting head in the contest.

The Pilgrim team will arrive in the Hub from New York on Thursday and be met by the reception committee.

Friday afternoon will practice and Saturday goes to Fall River to play the best team that can be gotten together in that city.

SHERMAN BUYS HORSES.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 11.—George D. Sherman of Port Henry, N. Y., bought from the Patchen Wilkes Stock Farm the four-year-old colt Edward Audubon, by J. J. Audubon, dam Silhouette, by Manlerino, and the yearling chestnut colt by J. J. Audubon, dam Lydia Thompson, by Guy Wilkes.

CLARKE WILL BOSS PIRATE CREW AGAIN

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 11.—Barney Dreyfus said to-day: "I have not seen Harry Pulliam since June 14. But I have no hard feelings toward him. I know that he has made a good president of the National League and he deserves to be re-elected. I will certainly vote for his re-election at the league meeting in December, and I believe he will be honored again by a unanimous vote.

"All this talk about Pat Powers or Frank Farrell succeeding Pulliam is the merest rot. They have plenty to do to attend to the jobs they now hold, and either one of them would be a joke as president of the National League.

"Clarke will manage the Pittsburg Club next season, contrary reports notwithstanding."

WALSH MATCHED WITH STANLEY

One of the best matches made in the local arena was consummated last night when the managers of Jimmy Walsh, the recognized bantam champion of this country, and Jimmy Stanley, the fastest boy of his weight in England, signed up for a meeting at the Dorchester A. C. on the night of October 20.

They are to weigh in at 116 pounds at 3 o'clock. Eugene Buckley will referee, and there will be the latest straight Queensberry rules to the decision for the distance of fifteen rounds.

It can be realized that Stanley has a wide and a draw with Walsh in two rounds would be a feather in the caliber of the bout can be appreciated.

PLAYERS GIVE GREEN TOKEN

After the game yesterday at the Huntington avenue grounds the ball players of the American team presented Carl Green, the genial treasurer of the club, who severs connection with the team after the present series, a beautiful diamond pin.

The presentation was made in the dressing room, and Captain Collins was the recipient. Green thanked the boys heartily for the token, and he was given three rousing cheers.

"OLD CY" MADE YEAR'S STRIKEOUT RECORD

Less than a month ago, when "Old Cy" Young was out of the game because of poor condition, fans the country over declared he was "all in" so far as pitching was concerned. When "Cy" got back into the game and allowed his first opponents but two hits, there was a good deal of talk and much exciting done by the wiser fans. The same "Cy" had pitched a "no-run-each-first" game, and a twenty inning contest, both against the Champion Athletics, yesterday still astonished the fans in the final inter-club series by doing the following stunts—the big league record for the year:

Struck out fifteen men.
Didn't allow a base on balls.
Didn't hit a batsman.
Allowed two measley hits.
Established superiority over his namesake "Little Cy" Young.

With each team having a win to its credit, the third game in the local interclub series between the Boston National and Boston American League teams will be played this afternoon at the Huntington avenue grounds, and it is expected that a larger crowd than on the preceding days will be on hand to lend encouragement to their favorites.

Fraser Is Billed.

Chick Fraser is billed by Fred Tenney to do the pitching for the Nationals. At times this season notably when he shut out the Pirates in a thirteen inning game) Fraser has shown good championship form. He is feeling in great shape, and will endeavor to duplicate the performance of Vic Willis on Monday and beat his opponents.

George Winter, who has been one of the mainstays of the Collinsites in the box this season, is first choice.

It is an enthusiastic crowd that saw the festivities on the links yesterday afternoon. The announcement that the rather aged and adolescent branches of the Young clan would pitch was enough to bring out a great array of baseball fans.

There was much speculation before the game as to which Young would be the rounhuns. It only needed a few minutes of play to see that the pitcher from Peru had his rival from Concord outclassed in every way. "Old Cy," for, liked the opportunity to contrast with his younger adversary.

Cy Established Record.

Cy established the record for the season in major leagues. He fanned fifteen of his opponents, and didn't allow a man to get to base on a pass or the like. He had superb control, and the best that the Nationals could do was score two measly hits. The players that made them—Batty and Wolverton—were the only men of the Tennesitos that didn't strike out.

By this record, "Old Cy" does not mean that the lad from Concord stood by his guns and did nothing. In the contrary, he pitched a very neat game, and the exchanges weren't all one-sided by more than six safeties.

It was a great game all around, and the fans left the park satisfied that the veteran is still able to deliver the goods and the greatest pitcher in the business.

MATHEWSON TO FACE ATHLETICS AGAIN

by noon the rain let up, and though the weather remained cloudy the chances looked good for getting the game under way.

In the third game here in the world's series this afternoon Mathewson is stated to do the pitching again for the giants, and it is Manager Horace Fogel's desire to keep one victory ahead on the odd game, and he thinks he can do it by pitching Christy every other day.

Mathewson would pitch every day if he thought he could stand the work.

The Giants arrived here this morning, accompanied by other big grips load of subulvers, many of whom had the idea that every money in existence was on the green on account of the Athletics' victory.

Conkley is down to pitch for the Athletics.

That there is an era of good feeling and friendship promised as a result of the series was shown yesterday by the presence of Frank Farrell of the Polo Grounds in a private box with President Johnson and Bulkley of the American League and Lynch and Pulliam of the National League respectively, and also Chairman of the National Committee August Hermann and Chairman Hart.

The series is drawing out all the old time lovers of the game as well as latter day fans. Among the former are Al Spalding, "Monkey" John M. Ward, James Mutrie, "Yankee" Robinson, Al Reach and Henry Chadwick, all prominent in the sport.

Well, what would baseball amount to, anyhow, if it were not for uncertainty? There would be no games fun, and what would become of baseball?

There surely would not have been such a record crowd as that which was present yesterday, or rather overflowing, if enthusiastic humanity as assembled at the Polo grounds yesterday and made the welkin whit it was in another place.

If the welkin ever rings, the button was busted yesterday when the first game production of, aye, such a spectacle of, frantic excitement, joy and disbelief was never before seen in this broad land of ours, where entertainments from President Roosevelt down prevails.

Spectators Under Control.

The rush was anticipated and the gates were opened long before the noon hour, but that was not early enough to get all the thousands who were willing to give up a dollar for the privilege of seeing a baseball victory soar.

Nothing could better or more forcibly illustrate that baseball is the national game than the manner in which the spirit of sport-loving American. The good, red blood was there because it was in the veins, and there are proud that we have the sporting spirit among us that will not be downed by a scientific American life fluid.

And all the more credit that the Athletics New Yorkers showed our Quaker friends that baseball is the big game in the Metropolis, and how to handle crowds on the best lines of the 100,000 class.

When nearly 25,000 baseball fans are assembled in one enclosure, as was the case yesterday, as prevailed at the Polo Grounds yesterday their demeanor is only such as can be exactly fitting in a church festival or a pink tea social, but with all the excitement there was no disorder, and the loitering under there was no set instant when the ushers and police and gatekeepers were not under control.

There were several times when the crowd tried to press forward to get a better view of the diamond, especially when some giant made a long swat that looked promising, but the policemen did their duty.

The management of the home club also deserves an immense amount of credit for the absence of frictius or congestion. There were many people, of course, who were unable to get advantage points, they desired to witness the game, but that could hardly be avoided under the circumstances.

There was not a place, point, hillock, rather, where there was not a fair spectator near to or far from the grounds that had not a good view of the field in whole or in fragmentally part that was not utilized by some daring interested spectator.

Rush Was Anticipated.

Philadelphia fans opened their eyes at the spectacle, and went back to their city astounded at the immensity of the whole affair. The scenes may be repeated, but only in good old New York.

The Athletics won the game and by the same score—3 to 0—that caused such dismay in Philadelphia on Monday when the same Giants walloped the same Athletics in the first game of this three years' series—and it will be famous for all time, Bender, but not outclassed, were the giants, while the Quakers were both, though neither disgraced. The giants earned all of their three runs on Monday, while all of the Athletics' runs were due to errors. There is perhaps little genuine satisfaction to a fan in the fact, for victories are what count, only part of the game, but a host of others make the series makes it worth the delving into the whys and wherefores of the contests.

Mathewson and Bender were brothers they could not connect successfully with the speedy ball that Plank served up.

Four resultless safeties is all McGraw's men could accomplish off Plank, and sign" was a totem of effectiveness. He showed a good degree of effectiveness. He relied on speed and speed alone. He did not have a curve ball, perhaps while, but he mixed up the balls he delivered, and, as the Giants say "hit," that was all that was necessary.

Hints on Health and Beauty

By the Professor

DEAR PROFESSOR:
Besides getting very tired, my feet swell up and get hot. What is best to use on them to overcome this?

A COOLING powder to dust over the feet is one of the most valued of toilet preparations to have on hand both Summer and Winter. An excellent powder for this purpose is made as follows:

Powdered Florentine orris..	75 grains
Phenic acid.....	1 grain
Essence of violet.....	1 grain
Alcohol	10 grains
Powdered starch	100 grains

Dissolve the acid in the alcohol and then add the violet. Next mix the starch and orris and make the mixture perfectly smooth.

DEAR PROFESSOR:
While the rest of my body is fairly plump, my arms are extremely thin. What can I do to develop them?
CINA, R. I.

MUSCLE is the only thing that gives natural plumpness and grace to the arms. It is impossible to acquire muscle without exercise, and the exercise must be of a kind that will develop all the muscles evenly.

At the risk of shocking you I am going to say that one of the very best exercises I know of to overcome your defect is sweeping. This is not original with me either. Our grandmothers had a good deal of their plumpness and grace in their girlhood through such exercise. And sweeping was advised by a well known physical specialist for a society woman who had arms so thin that she was obliged to wear sleeves to her gowns, even when she appeared in low-necked creations.

She followed the advice, bewildering her servants by sweeping the rooms of her magnificent home very frequently, and the result was a very noticeable improvement of her arms in less than a month.

DEAR PROFESSOR:
Although I wash my hair at least once every two weeks, I find it impossible to keep it sweet and clean. What do you recommend? MARY B. L.

LIKE most women, you have been led into error by supposing that all the attention the hair needs is an occasional washing. It needs much more than that to keep it in good condition.

There is no better tonic for a woman's hair than sunshine. Sit bareheaded outdoors, an hour each day. Loosen the hair and let the sun shine on it and the air blow through it.

During Summer days go without a hat as much as possible. There is nothing so good as ventilation to keep the hair healthy.

Airing and sunning the hair each day is not only good for the hair, but is an excellent scalp tonic as well. The sun will speedily cure any disease of the scalp and put it in good shape for the growing of hair functions. And a healthy scalp makes strong, beautiful hair.

Our grandmothers used to say, "Brush the hair every day, giving it a hundred strokes." And they were wise grandmothers, for such treatment will make the hair as soft and glossy as silk.

Doubtless you expect me to give recipes for washes and shampoos, but I am going to depart from the usual custom in this instance and let my wish the advice given above, and I feel confident that if you follow it you will be pleased with the result.

ARE WOMEN LIKE SHEEP?

Caroline Says They Are All About to Submit to Suffering to Acquire The New Wasp Waist

By Caroline

NOT until women have broken the chain that binds them to the dressmaker can they hope to win anything like equality with men.

Men dress like common sense beings, but women dress as the dressmaker decrees.

Every now and then the dressmaker lets the women think they have broken the chain, and the women become puffed up with their own importance. They remark that nothing could make them change their style of dressing.

For some time now all women have been revelling in short skirts and large waists, but their hour has come. The psychological moment has arrived. The links are about to be tightened.

The dressmakers have sent forth the warning cry, "The short skirt must go!"

"Long skirts are not collectors of dirt and breeders of germs," they say, "for a woman holds up a long skirt, but a short skirt she makes no attempt at holding up, as she fancies it doesn't touch, although usually when she walks it stirs up any amount of dirt."

This is the dressmakers' way of saying, "It is by change of fashion that we dressmakers thrive; if we let these short skirts be the style any more we will have to go out of business, so go they must, notwithstanding their comforts and healthfulness."

Small waists and large hips are also to be the style this Autumn.

The small, round waist that crushes all the internal organs into the space of a hairbreadth is to be again the fashion.

The dressmakers must have business.

The beauty and health of women are the last things to be considered. Modern dressmakers have set up an artificial standard of beauty in women's dress that is all wrong.

They have convinced women that beauty of form is only to be procured by encasing their figures in iron frames. This is entirely wrong, as any artist will tell you. The most beautiful form is where nature has been given a chance. The Venus de Milo has a large waist, and her form is universally conceded to be the most beautiful ever sculptured.

But notwithstanding the opinions of artists, who tell them the corseted woman is not the beautiful woman, and of doctors, who tell them the corseted woman is not the healthy woman, they will persist in wearing this cage that decreases their vitality and makes a natural life impossible.

Of course, any one who has ever seen a flock of sheep rushing madly about a field, first in one direction and then in another, just because one sheep started that way, will realize why it is that dressmakers have such an easy time changing fashions. Women are just like sheep. What one does they all do.

The dressmakers convince a few of the leaders of fashion that such and such a thing must be worn, the leaders appear in it once or twice, and the fashion is set.

No fashion is introduced because it is hygienic, or comfortable, or becoming, but because dressmakers must live.

Though women have enjoyed comparative comfort with short skirts and large waists, and they have no reason to be dissatisfied, still dressmakers will persist in long skirts and small waists to be the proper thing, so, no matter what the sacrifice to health and comfort, small waists and long skirts will be the order of the day.

Aren't there some women strong enough to stop these sheep? Can't they be going in another direction—the direction of health, comfort and beauty?

CONSUMPTION

ITS CAUSE, ITS CURE

Last of a Series of Six Articles Prepared for the Boston American by the New York Charity Organization Society's Committee on Prevention of Tuberculosis

DUTY OF THE PUBLIC

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

WE have seen that the cause of consumption is a germ contained in the spit of the consumptive; we have seen that the disease can be prevented, and we see that it causes annually in this country the death of about 150,000, together with untold sorrow, privation and misery; we have seen that it can be cured; that fresh air, sufficient food and rest are the remedies, and that there are no "cure cures."

There remain two considerations of prime importance. And first, he who has consumption or symptoms which point to the disease, such as a cough which he cannot shake, a high temperature, night sweats, loss of weight or heavy matter in his sputa, should at once consult a reliable physician or go to a dispensary and follow carefully the advice received.

To save himself if he is not able to secure in his home a very large amount of fresh air and good, wholesome food; to save his family and his friends, is he to be considered base who, realizing the extent of his germ-laden spit, let him go to the hospital. Lonely as he may think it, he will at least know that he is doing his best in his battle for life, and that he is not endangering others.

It may be difficult, it may seem even impossible to give up his work upon which his family depends, because he has a slight cough which a doctor tells him is caused by consumption, but it will be no easier to give up his work later when he has become too weak to work and when recovery will mean a much longer period of sickness and a greater loss of wages.

Delay Is Fatal

CONSTANTLY it must be remembered that in the majority of cases of consumption, if properly treated in time, the disease is not fatal. Delay, however, often is fatal.

For the cure of consumption new elements and rare mountain air are not necessary. Cures may be and are effected even at sea level.

Our municipalities, wherever they may be, the citizens and taxpayers who make up public opinion and control public expenditures, have a responsibility which they cannot avoid.

It was well enough for a former generation, thinking that consumption was hereditary, not knowing that it was curable, not believing that it was preventable, to refuse to permit large expenditures of the public funds in what seemed a fruitless contest for mastery with this mysterious disease.

Now the situation is entirely changed to us who know that consumption is preventable, that it is curable, and that it is daily communicated in a known manner to the healthy by the sick.

Those who continue to refuse to provide adequate hospitals, sanatoriums and dispensaries for the cure of consumptives and for the prevention of its spread among the homes of those who do not know how to take proper care of their germ-laden sputum, is wilfully to condemn to misery, sorrow and premature death thousands upon thousands of human lives.

$330,000,000 Yearly

It is a conservative estimate that the loss due to lives lost each year in this country through tuberculosis represent a financial loss of $330,000,000.

Purely on a basis of dollars and cents, then, it is unreasonable and wasteful to refuse to build and operate hospitals, sanatoriums and dispensaries, the cost of which is but a small proportion of the money that would be saved to the State by such means.

Municipal and State authorities must, with the new knowledge which has come in recent years, be prepared to embark upon a new course, a wiser, more far-seeing policy, and the taxpayers must demand and indorse these new expenditures.

There is another consideration, that the prevention of tuberculosis, the Great White Plague, the Disease of the Tenements, is not only, or not chiefly, a problem for the physician; it is and must be upon the citizens as a whole that the responsibility must fall.

The wonderful decrease in the death rate from this disease in the last thirty years cannot be attributed wholly or in its largest part to the medical supervision of this disease, important as that has been. It has been due rather to a better standard of living, to more widespread education, to less unwholesomeness, to better housing, to improved conditions of employment, to all those many agencies that are slowly affording to wage-earners and their children opportunities for education and healthful growth.

The Real Fight

It is along these lines that the real fight against consumption must be waged. In its larger aspect the control of consumption is not one of the cure of consumptives, but one for sanatoriums, hospitals, dispensaries and treatment in the home cannot afford sufficient relief. For more than two-thirds each year die of this preventable disease in this country, nor can the public afford 150,000 consumptives now living in New York city from contaminating the disease to their sands and thousands of others.

Conditions, however, are so improved that men and women will grow up with fresh, healthy bodies, and will be kept free from the germ of consumption and with brains minds full of truth, with temperance, duty, darkness and lack of air weaken the body and the disease-breeding houses can be razed and replaced by those which will not permit too long hours of work, by those filled with conditions of weakening gases must be changed.

It is also necessary that the habit spitting, to provide hospitals, to maintain a costly system for the cure of every case of consumption if men are to be allowed to endanger their own lives and the lives of their helpless children by living in hovels and by working under conditions which experience and common sense show to be dangerous to the body and to the body weak and unable to resist the germs which, in good health, healthy body can successfully withstand.

The whole story is summed up in four words: fresh air, good food—fresh air to cure the consumptive; fresh air to prevent consumption. Fresh air and good food keep the body healthy and strong.

Nature is the great healer. It is man, with his tenements, his factories, his drunkenness, his ignorance and his unhealthy, that has made consumption what it is—the disease of the masses.

CARING FOR INDOOR PLANTS

ONE of the signs of a well-kept house is always to have the table in the parlor covered with a profusion of in a dainty and tasteful a manner as is possible. A few cut flowers and growing plants prettily arranged will do much to render the plainest meal attractive, and the necessary outlay for those who have no garden need not be great.

Castor oil palms are very good indoor plants; they require plenty of water, and must be allowed to get dry, or the leaves will fall off.

Cut flowers should have fresh water every day, the dead ones should be removed, and the vase kept in good condition should have the stalk lightly clipped, and be rearranged with fresh green if necessary.

Very effective results are obtained from dried grasses, cat-tails, etc. I would not recommend the use of them for table decoration, but they are quite valuable in dark corners and for arrangements in large vases, filled it would tax your resources to keep filled with cut flowers.

Dying flowers can often be revived for a few hours by placing the stalks in hot water. A few drops of ammonia will also answer this purpose.

Ferns should be sprayed twice a week during the Summer, once a week in Winter to keep them fresh and the syringed from the leaves. It is also a good plan, if not too cold, to give them a bath in the open rain. In fact, all plants are improved by this treatment.

Rubber plants of which are frequently to be bought for a few cents each, form very handsome and effective pot plants for flowers are scarce. These will last a considerable time, but the little pots in which you buy them are soaked in water every day will consider indispensable.

Rubber plants require much the same treatment as palms, but should be kept in the light and turned around occasionally so that the leaves may grow evenly.

It is always wise to consider, when buying flower decorations, the kind which will present the best value for the money, both as to show and lasting powers. Anemones, daffodils, narcissus, daisies, marguerites, iris, etc., will last twice as long as the more fascinating roses, tuberoses, hellatrope, geraniums, etc.

Maiden hair ferns are not particularly easy to keep indoors, especially if much gas is burned in the room. They do, however, last for some time if once a week they are placed in a pail of water, gently submerged in a pail of water for half an hour. They should also be in a temperature the room directly after the gas is lighted, and should never be placed in a current of air, or between open doors or windows.

Palms should have the pots entirely submerged in water once a week in Winter, and every other day during the Summer. They may stand in the water for half an hour after which they should be allowed to drain, and the leaves should be carefully sponged (a weak water for milk and water), after which the pot can be returned to its china covering.

CHAPTER XXI.—CONTINUED.

THE flush had faded again from Geraldine's face, leaving her deadly white as before.

"More than that," continued her father, warmly, "you don't think it, and can't help it, but what is a disgrace for you to have been engaged to a man who is now in penal servitude, branded for life?

Favoring Vickers

"People talk of it a great deal—that you, my good, beautiful girl, who hardly knew what crime meant, should be betrothed to a convict! It is a great grief to me, Geraldine, a very great grief."

And the old merchant's eyes filled with tears.

"It will all come right in time," said Geraldine, rising and putting her arm lovingly around his neck. "But you must not ask me to give up my faith in Laurence, I cannot. I believe in him still so strongly as ever. Whatever my wild, rash offences made me waver a little—for a time—but now I am convinced that there is some terrible mistake—if not something worse—at the bottom of it all. Every day since then I have been thinking over it, trying to find a clue to the mystery.

"What about those investigations you told Laurence's solicitor you were making? they resulted in nothing? Has the American Ambassador done nothing?"

"All is blank," answered Mr. Lucas sadly. "We saw that it would be useless to continue them."

She drew away from him quickly. A rush of passionate blushes flamed over her face.

"I don't ask you to lose faith in Craig, Geraldine," he said, turning reproachfully toward her, "but I think it right that you should give up all pretence in the connection with him. Why should you humiliate? His own uncle has broken off all communication between you. Besides, what is the use of keeping it up now? He will not come out of prison until his time is finished. He will be dead to the world for at least twenty years."

"Indeed young Vickers said he thought it very likely he would never come out at all, considering the terrible hardships of the life, especially if he continues to behave badly, and so bring upon himself these extraordinary punishments."

"Ralph Vickers said that!" interrupted Craig's friend, stopping suddenly in his pacing to and fro.

Geraldine's astonishment at the unmistakable meaning that underlay the tones of her tone—not knowing, how every word of his was stabbing her young heart. "He said so some ago and I must say that I agree with him, especially if he continues to behave badly, and so bring upon himself these extraordinary punishments."

"Ralph Vickers said that!" interrupted Craig's friend, stopping suddenly in his pacing to and fro.

"Indeed Mr. Lucas, not noticing the astonishment of her tone—not knowing, how every word of his was stabbing her young heart. "He said so some ago and I must say that I agree with him, especially if he continues to behave badly, and so bring upon himself these extraordinary punishments."

"Ralph Vickers said that!" interrupted Craig's friend, stopping suddenly in his pacing to and fro.

Geraldine did not speak. She was pacing the room again slowly, full of inward anguish.

"I am getting old," continued her father, with a little sigh, "and I should like to see you settled in case anything should happen to me. I want to see you safe in the care of a husband who loves you and will devote his life to you—one in whom, after long trial, I can repose perfect confidence."

Ralph Vickers is such a man, Geraldine —open-hearted, noble to the core, and devoted in love with you."

Properly Scorned

"Did he tell you he was in love with me?" asked Geraldine quickly.

"I have seen it for a long time," answered her father, with a significant smile. "But yesterday I taxed him with it, and he confessed it. I promised to speak to you on the subject, and his face lighted up wonderfully. I should certainly be glad, my child, if you could set aside your prejudices against him, and see him as he is. I am growing attached to him, and could receive him very heartily as my son. I should like to be assured that my wealth and business would pass into the hands of one who would well look after them."

Lucas looked at his daughter appealingly. To his surprise her whole face was aglow with strong emotion.

"Father," she cried vehemently, "I would not marry Ralph Vickers if there were not another man in all the world! You praise him; you think he is good; but he is only deceiving you as he deceives others. He is cunning and heartless—a false friend, a hypocrite and a scoundrel. I warn you against him. Scarcely a word of truth ever passes from his lips."

Mr. Lucas looked shocked and grieved.

"Geraldine, these are hard things to say of a man, who, I believe, would lay his life down for you—had things to say of a man without real cause and proof."

"Ralph Vickers is the sort of man to take care that there shall never be any open cause or proof," she returned earnestly. "He does all his ill work in secret. If I were in your place, he should not remain in the office another day. I am convinced that he is dangerous, that every kindness you show him will only be repaid upon you and stab you at some future time."

"At any rate he can't treat me any worse than the other one did," said her father bitterly. And I must say, Geraldine, it seems very strange to me that you, who refused to believe strong evidence against Craig, should speak so uncharitably of Vickers without any cause whatever. It is all prejudice, nothing more. But it makes me very unhappy."

And with that Mr. Lucas left the room.

CHAPTER XXII.

Blood Money

FROM the very moment in which he had received Warder Gannaway's significant message, "Shot in trying to escape," Ralph Vickers has been a changed man. A load seemed to have been lifted from his mind. Anxiety and terror, that had for months stalked with him unseen, fled, and in their place came exulting self-confidence. His youth was renewed; the premature lines of care disappeared from his face. Now, as he looked at himself in the glass, he felt more worthy to be Geraldine Lucas's lover.

It did not occur to him that the insertion of the word "dead" in Gannaway's message would lend life to Craig's cause. He had troubled little to read only the first few lines of the letter which it had enclosed.

It was probable that Geraldine would only learn of Craig's death by the newspaper writing time came around. There would be no letter from Craig to tell her that Craig was dead. Vickers could then easily persuade her father to write to the authorities in Parliament street. Then the truth would be known.

The blow would fall still her, of course, but Vickers trusted in the recuperative power of youth and the healing effect of time. After an interval she would consent to marry him in order to please her father's wishes. He would his triumph be secured.

He flattered himself that he had by this time sufficiently worked his way into Mr. Lucas's confidence. He was now well-nigh indispensable to the old merchant, and his personal fascination had helped in win what he had achieved for—an influence over Geraldine's father second to that of no one except herself.

Now in his perplexity about Gannaway's reward to the thought of Mr. Lucas. He would borrow the money from him. It would wisdom to give an advance on his salary.

He had thought first of a possible embezzlement, but that would not do for Vickers's wealth, love and honor within his reach, he would be a fool to commit an act which would bring him infinitely better to go to his employer openly and ask for the money.

A Fateful Letter

He would not be required to state what he was going to do with it. Even if he was asked his invention would not be at fault for a lie.

He waited in his room in the office for Mr. Lucas to come in. He was later than usual in the hour of his arrival. What could be detaining him? Vickers wondered a little, impatiently. He had a letter to write to Gannaway. He was obliged to write it as Mr. Lucas was out of the way. He could not at home.

Handwriting, even in a disguised style, would have been too risky, although his communications were always short and his statements adroitly veiled. Sometimes they were unsigned; "Joan Hardy"—that being the only name by which he was known to Warder Gannaway.

He reflected now, while waiting for Mr. Lucas, that the moment was opportune for writing his letter—the one that was to accompany the reward money, and the last he intended to send.

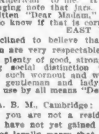
For Those In Trouble

Aid and Advice

By Rev. A. E. George



"A BROKEN-HEARTED MOTHER": Your husband has a good trade, but through drink, he has lost your position. You take pity upon him, and go to work yourself and help him. He grows worse, and abuses you because you do not give him money.

You are obliged to have him arrested. He serves nearly four months. You work in a boarding house, and your oldest girl, eleven years of age, works with a friend for her board. The little boy is placed with friends in the country, and the little girl stays with you.

Everything goes well as long as he is away. Then some friend gets your husband out of confinement. He comes to your place of work, and comes there drunk. You plead with him not to do there. He promises to give up his habits.

You make your home with him again, but there is no change in him. He drinks, and makes life hideous for you and threatens to murder you if you put him away again.

This is your story in a nutshell. It is the sad story that is going on in so many households. Your desire is that the AMERICAN, and say you will watch every issue for an answer.

Well, the plain answer is: there is no use of living with this man. Make up your mind to this decision. As you were not well off when that lady in the beautiful house, who was so kind to you, go back to her. She will receive you gladly, put him where he belongs. Do not fear his threats. Make a complaint against him, and seek protection.

You could put the children in a "Home." There are Roman Catholic and Protestant institutions where you could find shelter for them. When you have found a place for your children, leave the city. If you think it best, and keep your whereabouts unknown to your husband.

This may stop your worrying sooner than if you remained working in the old place. Do not try to live with such a husband.

He needs discipline. Have him sent to the State Hospital at Foxboro. He will come out a new man. Then subscribe to AMERICAN, and say you will watch every issue for the answer.

POINTS ON TRIMMING HATS

HOWEVER cheap your hat may be—and often a cheap one answers every purpose—let the ribbon, flowers, feathers or jet, etc., which form its trimming, be as good as you can possibly afford, since this is true economy in the long run. When a hat is out of date, the trimming, brush it, free it from dust and put it away; it will emerge in a few months and do its duty still once again.

Every home milliner should possess a bit-box, where all these articles can be stored, and this would prove a veritable blessing to a large family of girls, since, perhaps, what Mary has finished with will be just the one thing which Jane will consider indispensable.

One of the first aims in millinery is to accomplish the production of a really smart ribbon bow, and this requires practice.

The chief thing is to get the knot as small and tight as possible, and then pull out the loops and ends freely.

Another endeavor to get the loops of bows to stand up is to use artificial support, and where the ribbon is of good quality this is quite easy.

Readers should take to the style to adopt in the trimming of hats, a little time spent examining models in some good milliner's window will give the girl of artistic tastes ample ideas, and then by having mastered the materials required let her take an excursion to the city wholesale houses and see where similar goods may be had most cheaply. Further, the price of millinery and the various items comprising it varies more than anything else.

JACK HARKAWAY'S SON

BY CAPTAIN RICHARD RUDD

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

WHEN Jack Harkaway and his friends had to be bound to prevent them from killing each other under the influence of hasheesh they thought their experiences had about reached the limit of endurance. Jack had saved his yacht twice from being blown up, but there seemed little chance of catching Hunston, who had escaped from Sing Sing and was fleeing to Japan. Jack's crew, maddened by hasheesh, had slaughtered each other right and left. The yacht looked like a shambles, and a boat from a cruiser was coming aboard.

CHAPTER VIII.

A Pretty Problem.

HERE was a situation which was appalling.

The decks were covered with blood and strewn with corpses.

The entire crew was dead or disabled.

The cook, while he was entitled to an mercy, had been little better than murdered.

The blood of some of the men they had been forced to slay was still fresh on the hands of the Mabel's company, and here was a cruiser about to look her over.

"Jack," said Steel, "this is the first time I've ever been sorry to see the Stars and Stripes."

"And it must be the last," said Jack. "There's nothing to do but tell what has happened."

"Madness," growled Parsons. "I tell you we'll all swing for it."

"That may be," said Jack, "but the truth will do better than anything else, and it's got to be told. I am in command of this ship."

Parsons paced up and down nervously.

"But how about that cook," said he, "I killed him, and it wasn't in self-defence. How am I going to get out of that?"

"It was in self-defence," said Jack. "If you hadn't killed him he would have killed us. Come, come, there's nothing to do but tell the truth, and the sooner we get up and welcome our visitors the better it will be for us."

This course was plainly distasteful to the rest of the company, as Jack's determination carried all before it.

The expression of horror and astonishment on the face of the ensign who had come off from the cruiser Jack will never forget to their day.

The officer was at first disposed to doubt the story.

"It is incredible," he said sternly. "There has been some crime here. I must report to my captain at once."

An Old Friend

"I sincerely hope that you will," said Jack, "but first let me explain things a bit more clearly."

He went into a great part of the story, of Hunston's plans to prevent him from sailing, of his plots to throw us and sink the ship, and of the consequences to that old rascal that would follow if he were overtaken.

The ensign, who was little more than a boy, opened his eyes at the story.

"Why, it's like a romance," he said, and pressed for more details.

When he had finished his story Jack asked to be allowed to accompany the officer back to his ship, where a group of officers were gathered on deck, impatiently awaiting for news.

"I should have been compelled to bring you, anyway," said the young officer grimly. "If hold you as a hostage, to keep your friends here."

It was with grave misgivings that Jack mounted the cruiser's deck and faced her captain, but they were instantly dispelled when he recognized in that sea fighter his father's old friend, Captain Hargreave.

The captain listened to Jack's story with interest.

"Mr boy," he said, "we naval men expect a good deal of trouble in our time, and I've been through two wars, but you've beat my adventures I ever had. Come below and have a glass of sherry, and I'll man your boat for you until you can get into Savannah."

Jack declined the sherry, but went below with the captain, where they spent half an hour filling out details which the haste of his first story had compelled him to leave out.

A Man to Watch

Then he was permitted to rejoin his companions.

Two officers from the cruiser accompanied him, and, while the smell of blue jackets removed the stains of the battle and made preparations to bury the dead, the officers prepared a full report to be forwarded to Washington.

"It is lucky you know Hargreave," said the elder of the officers to Jack.

"Yes," said Jack. "I have been congratulating myself on it."

"And well you may," returned the officer. "This thing looks very suspicious, you know. I for one would not have swallowed your yarn so readily."

While this was said calmly and with all the outward evidences of courtesy, Jack felt the sting of it.

"Here is a man," he thought, "whom I must watch. If Hunston ever got hold of him the pair of them might make trouble for me."

But he passed the covert insult lightly and contented himself with making a mental note of the man's name, which was MacNichol.

According to the promise of the captain, a detail of jackies was sent over to supply the place of the crew, and an English relieved Parsons, who was physically prostrated at the command.

And under convoy of the cruiser the Mabel steamed quietly into Savannah with all but three [illegible] men of the crew behind her in the bosom of the broad Atlantic.

Her arrival supplied the papers of Savannah and, indeed, those of the entire country, with the sensation of the year.

It was telegraphed throughout the world and read with many a thrill at many an inland breakfast table, where it shook the festive [illegible] coffee cup. Jack was made to run away and go to see at the earliest opportunity.

Another Ambush

But the place where it made the most profound impression was in an unfrequented restaurant in a side street in the city of Havana.

The American newspapers had just come in, and a waiter handed them deferentially to an old man who sat at a little table in a corner.

"What is it? What has happened?" asked a young girl who sat opposite him.

The man threw the papers on the floor and stamped on them.

"It is nothing," he said, with a fearful oath. "Nothing. I can beat him yet, and I will beat him. But by the cursed good luck that seems to hang to him he has escaped from the deadliest trap that ever was set for anybody.

"Think of it! Ten or twelve of my best men killed and buried to the Atlantic, and his own yacht disabled so she can't get out of Havana harbor for a week, and that young fiend sailing down on my trail like a bloodhound. But I'll kill him yet, and I'll strew the pieces of him from here to Cape Horn."

And without giving the pretty girl who sat watching him any further information, the old man Hunston got up and walked out of the room.

Mabel picked up the papers and read them eagerly.

"Thank Heaven," she said, "he's safe thus far; but, oh! if he ever comes here I'm afraid he will be able to carry out his threat literally."

As Mabel Hunston was reading the story of Jack's exploits Jack was sailing into Savannah bay, blissfully unconscious of the fact that Hunston himself was watching him from a housetop near the shore.

TO THE BOY READERS OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN:

AN old Roman writer once said: "Think of your ancestors and your posterity." It isn't a bad idea to follow his advice occasionally. Before you do anything that might make you sorry or ashamed stop a moment and think what your old grandmother would like you to do. Then do what you think she would approve of. If you are ever attempted to do wrong, stop and think. Some day you may marry and have children of your own. How would you like to have some one say to them, "Oh, you needn't think you're so wonderful. Your father was arrested once." So, whenever you have to choose between the right and the wrong, remember your duty to those who have gone and those who are to come. Live every day and act every hour so that they will all be proud of you.

QUINCY-HONEY ROMANCE GREW IN TRIP ABROAD

Boston's Ex-Mayor and His Affianced Viewed Old World Scenes Together.

FLAVOR OF POLITICS, ALSO

A romance of the Old World is connected with the news given out here of the engagement of ex-Mayor Josiah Quincy of this city to Miss Mary Honey of Newport, R. I. The formal acquaintance that Mr. Quincy had with Miss Honey began through his business interests with her father Colonel Samuel R. Honey. Colonel Honey and his daughter went abroad during the past Summer, and Mr. Quincy traveled with them. While viewing the historic scenes of the Old World a still older story was wrought again, culminating in the betrothal of Mr. Quincy and Miss Honey.

The marriage will occur in New York within a month or so. The ceremony will be strictly private, as Mr. Quincy has been a widower for less than two years. The announcement of the engagement was made in Newport, long the home of the bride, by a law partner of her father.

Miss Honey is a young woman of rare personality and personal attractiveness. She has a lineage as blue-blooded as that of the Quincy family. Her father was a former colonel in the United States army, has been Lieutenant-Governor of Rhode Island, a member of its Legislature and prominent in its delegations to national Democratic conventions. His rank as a lawyer is high. Miss Honey is an accomplished pianist and highly cultured. She is well known as a patroness of art.

She met Mr. Quincy through his acquaintance with her father. That came about through the prominence of both in politics. In fact, the romance may be said to have begun in politics.

Of late Mr. Quincy has represented Colonel Samuel R. Honey, his father-in-law elect, in legal business in this city.

That was one of the many circumstances which brought the distinguished Bostonian and the gifted Newport society girl together. They were mutually attracted, he by her charm of manner and cultivated mind and she by his solidity and mental poise.

Mr. Quincy did not marry until he had retired from the office of Mayor of Boston. Then he went to Europe and wedded Mrs. Ellen Frances Tyler, the widow of Professor William R. Tyler, who was headmaster of the Adams Academy in Quincy, Mass. Mr. Quincy had long been a friend of the Tylers. He married the professor's widow in St. George's Church, Hanover, London, England, on February 17, 1900. Four years later she died. Their child, then six months old, survived her. Mrs. Quincy was a daughter of Dr. Franz Hugo Krebs of this city.

Mr. Quincy is now forty-seven years old and did not marry until he was forty-three. He had been regarded by political associates and personal friends as a confirmed bachelor.

BACK BAY GIRL WEDS ACTOR IN NEW YORK

Romance in Quiet Marriage In "Little Church Around the Corner."

BRIDE INHERITS MILLIONS

MARRIED.

DUNBAR—SHARPSTEEN, in New York, Sunday, October 8, by the Rev. George Houghton, Miss Mary Helena Sharpsteen of Boston to Errol Dunbar.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11. Society people of Boston and New York are surprised over the wedding in "The Little Church Around the Corner" of Miss Mary Helena Sharpsteen, one of the wealthiest young society women of Boston, and Errol Dunbar, an actor who was prominent a year or two ago with William Gillette in "Sherlock Holmes" and in other plays of note.

It had been known some time that Miss Sharpsteen and Mr. Dunbar were engaged to be married, but society of Newport, Boston and New York expected an elaborate ceremony. They are aghast at the pleasingly romantic manner in which the young couple have begun married life.

"The Little Church Around the Corner" has been the scene of hundreds of wedings that have been theatrical people, and that is probably the reason why the couple chose it as the scene of their entrance into married life.

Romance Began at Theatre.

Miss Sharpsteen's romance began at the Park Theatre in Boston in December, 1901, when she made her début as an amateur actress, taking the title role in "Richelieu at Sixteen." The play was one of the most expensively staged ever presented in Boston. Miss Sharpsteen thinking more of her art than whether or not the play would be a financial success.

With her in one of the leading roles at this play was Errol Dunbar. His excellent acting and charming personality captivated Miss Sharpsteen, and the acquaintance soon ripened into a deeper affection. Their wooed unostentatiously, and it was not long before he had captured the charming Back Bay heiress's heart.

Finally they became engaged and determined to keep the fact secret. But reports of the engagement soon began to circulate, although her mother promptly denied the engagement, and Miss Sharpsteen hied herself to her beautiful home in Newport—Mr. Dunbar being himself in Newport, too.

The bride is the daughter of the late Clark L. Sharpsteen, for many years a member of the Paris house of a New York dry goods firm. He amassed a fortune of several million, every cent of which goes to the bride when she becomes of age. She is now in possession of an income of $50,000 a year. She also inherits a fortune from her aunt, the wife of Professor Michael, the well-known expert on chemistry.

DEATH MYSTERY DRIVES WOMAN TO KILL SELF

Mrs. Frank H. Frazier, Friend of Mrs. Chase of Swampscott, a Suicide.

A STRANGE PARALLEL

Special to the Boston American.

LYNN, Oct. 11.—Grief over the tragic and mysterious death of Mrs. Jennie Chase, the wealthy Swampscott woman, is believed to have caused Mrs. Frank H. Frazier to kill herself. Mrs. Chase and Mrs. Frazier were intimate friends. After Mrs. Chase's death Mrs. Frazier read every newspaper clipping she could find containing accounts of the death of her friend and of the investigations of the police into the circumstances surrounding it.

Similar are the circumstances surrounding the deaths of the two women. One of the causes of the death of Mrs. Chase is supposed to have been inhaling gas. Mrs. Frazier chose this method of killing herself. Beside the body of Mrs. Chase a farewell note was found. Mrs. Frazier left a note saying she could live no longer.

Mr. Frazier, the dead woman's husband, attributes his wife's suicide to grief over the death of Mrs. Chase and also partly to despondency caused by the death of Alphonse Nichols, Mrs. Frazier's nephew, who had been almost like a son to her.

Once a month Mrs. Chase and Mrs. Frazier would gather a fresh bunch of flowers and carry them to the grave of the nephew. Mrs. Frazier's body, fully clothed, was found on her bed. The door was locked, and all the crevices had been packed with paper.

FOR GOVERNOR— CHARLES W. BARTLETT

His Election Will Convince Congress That Massachusetts Is in Earnest in Its Demand for Free Hides, Coal, Iron Ore, Lumber and Wood Pulp.

Charles W. Bartlett, citizen, soldier, advocate, was born in Boston August 12, 1845. His parents removed to East Cambridge a few years later, where he attended the public schools. At the age of 14 he entered the junior class of the Putnam Grammar School and much interested in his studies; but he was compelled to give up his school and go to work on a farm in the town of Lee, N. H., where the educational advantages were not equal to those of Cambridge.

However, the boy was possessed with a desire to secure an education, and what time could be spared from the many duties he found to perform upon a rocky farm, he attended the district school of Lee. There are still living in New Hampshire quite a number of people who knew Gen. Bartlett at this period of his career, and who tell with pride of the efforts of a dutiful son to aid his parents in getting a living on a rented farm, while at the same time striving to secure an education. It is related by one who knows the early life of Gen. Bartlett that, to while away leisure hours reader, devoting the long winter evenings after the farm work was completed to careful study and reading of such books as he could secure. He was in that New Hampshire home, devoid of everything but the barest necessities, that the successful advocate of to-day grounded himself in the rudiments of law and history. He was a good farmer and a good student, and the habits of early life imposed upon him by lack of wealth and opportunity made him thoroughly in all he does perfectly frank, open and honest.

Determined to secure an education, opportunity came to him to enter a small academy located at Andover, N. H. While enjoying this (to him) great privilege of attending an academy, he continued his studies in private. It was at this period of his career, and who to tell with pride of the efforts of a dutiful son to aid his parents in getting a living on a rented farm, while at the same time striving to secure an education. He was a good farmer and a good student, and the habits of early life imposed upon him by lack of wealth and opportunity made him thoroughly in all he does perfectly frank, open and honest.

The pinch of poverty was unceasing, however, and as the season grew apace it became more and more apparent that Bartlett was compelled to relinquish his studies and go to work as a breadwinner. He worked as a laborer in a crew that was employed on the slate contemplated by the railroad. This was hard work, and the hours were from daylight to dark; but two months of such labor enabled him to accumulate money with which to assist in his education.

At the breaking out of the war he was about 16 years of age, and he was extremely anxious to join his schoolboy comrades and enlist, but being in only son he could not secure the consent of his parents, and at this time could not go to the front. Later, however, he secured the consent of his father and he promptly left the New Hampshire home, went to Boston, and enlisted as a private in Company A, 5th Massachusetts Volunteers. He served his term of service and was mustered out in November, 1864.

When he returned home from the war, he resumed his studies at the academy at Andover, N. H., where some boyish prank brought him into conflict with the academy authorities, which resulted in his leaving the school. With a determination characteristic of the man, the boy was more than ever desirous of securing an education, and without saying a word to any one he went to Dartmouth College, and there took the entrance examinations. One of the many branches in which he was examined he never studied, but it was here that his great reading and retentive memory came to his aid, and not only in this particular branch, but in all others, he successfully passed the examination. He learned in the month of June of his success with his examinations. Then arose the momentous problem of providing the necessary money to defray his expenses. Inspired with a worthy ambition, he sought work to earn the money. The best thing available was employment as a laborer with a bridge-builder. He accepted the opportunity gladly, and was put to work with other men at the dangerous work of building a coffer-dam. He continued in the employ of the bridge-builder until the college year opened in September. With the money thus earned young Bartlett entered Dartmouth College, and managed to get along until the winter vacation came.

In those days it was customary to permit deserving students to leave college to teach for brief periods country schools throughout New England. Availing himself of the opportunity to increase his depleted funds, he went to Truro, Mass., and there in that section of the old Cape Cod town young Bartlett made his first appearance as a school teacher. He was successful in his teaching, and with the money accumulated he went back to Dartmouth College for the spring term.

After completing his studies at college that spring he went into the hay fields as a laborer, and following the harvest from the seashore to the uplands. With the money earned he went to college for the fall term, later returning to Cape Cod to teach a brief term at Wellfleet. This was a rather peculiar school, in that it was made up principally of those healthy young Cape Codders who passed most of the year in deep sea fishing, returning home for a brief period in winter. There were between 50 and 60 of them, and they were a studious, well-behaved lot and seemed to realize that it was important that they should make the most of their scant educational opportunities.

From Wellfleet Bartlett returned to college for another term, when an urgent request came for a teacher to take charge of a school in which the pupils had been running things to suit themselves. The college sent word that he had two men, either of whom were capable of undertaking the task. One of them was Gen. Bartlett, who was Judge Maynard, now of the Superior Court of Massachusetts. Gen. Bartlett was sent out to take charge of the school, and as in almost all his undertakings, he was successful. This school was at South Gardner, Mass. Later he again taught at Wellfleet.

While in college Gen. Bartlett was a member of the K. K. E. fraternity. After he graduated from college in the class of '69 he received a proposition to teach the high school at Solomon Falls, N. H. There had been considerable trouble and a riot born had been broken up. He took charge of the school and taught it peaceably.

In the meantime at every opportunity he had been studying law, and soon after completing his college course he entered Albany, N. Y., law school. He completed the course, and was admitted to the bar of New York in 1871.

Gen. Bartlett returned to his New Hampshire home and entered into a law partnership with Samuel M. Wheeler of Dover, N. H. He remained there two years, and then started for New York city by way of Boston. While in Boston he met a friend with whom he had business transactions in New Hampshire who wanted him to take charge of some legal matters in Boston. Gen. Bartlett demurred, saying he had no office facilities for work, and was on his way to New York. He was induced to call at the office of N. B. Bryant, an attorney, and explain the situation to him. Mr. Bryant very generously gave Gen. Bartlett a desk in his office, and invited him to remain just as long as he wished. The result was that Gen. Bartlett occupied that desk for 15 years.

Gen. Bartlett is a senior member of the firm of Bartlett & Anderson, one of the most prominent and successful law firms of Boston. He is a past commander of John A. Andrew Post 15, G. A. R., and resides in Dorchester with his wife. He has been a member of the Suffolk County Bar Association since it was founded, and is a member of the Curtis Club, the Taylor Club, the New Hampshire Club, and is president of the Dartmouth Educational Association and a member of other Dartmouth alumni associations. He is a man of simple habits, loves horses, hardy sports, but his greatest enjoyment he secures from his home life.

Gen. Charles W. Bartlett is an ideal man for the honorable position of Governor of this Commonwealth. He is scrupulously honest and fearless. He would execute the offices entrusted to him for the benefit of the whole people. Special interests asking favors at the expense of the people would receive no consideration. He is an advocate of reciprocal trade treaties with all countries, and with Canada in particular. He believes in a revision of the tariff to meet the requirements of the welfare of our New England industries. He has the confidence of the business interests, is trusted by the farmer, and the workingmen will find in him a true friend.

Voters of Massachusetts are urged to cast their ballot for Charles W. Bartlett, and thus emphasize the appeal to Congress for relief from the tariff burden which threatens to crush the life out of industrial New England.

"For the benefit of Massachusetts industries, I believe that Congress should place upon the free list hides, coal, iron ore, lumber and wood pulp, and that duties upon manufactured and other articles be reduced wherever possible. I am also convinced that reciprocal trade treaties should be made by this country with Canada and other nations."—CHARLES W. BARTLETT.

Robbed for a Coffin to Live In—and Robbed for a Coffin to Be Buried In

The SMALL Policy Holders in the "Industrial Companies" Are the Saddest Victims of Financial Piracy

Copyright, 1905, by Star Company

When the investigation of the insurance companies shall reach the "industrial" companies, with their hundreds of thousands of small policy holders, the real shame of the American financier will be revealed.

The robbery of big policy holders in big companies has been as nothing compared with the heartless and shameless exploitation of poor men and women in the companies that bid for the painfully saved up pennies of the poor.

A man who collects for one of these companies writes a letter which we shall print hereafter in full.

His work compels him to go from house to house, from flat to flat, from one poor, dark tenement to another, collecting the money that goes to the insurance sharks.

Everywhere it is the same story:

"It is hard to pay the insurance money; it gets harder every month.

"The rents are going up all the time; only this month they added to our rent as much as would just pay the insurance. And where shall we go if we move?"

That is a statement made over and over.

And it is hard to get steady work, and the workers are anxious.

Every little family is drained of so much per month by the heartless sharks that manage industrial insurance, and their ways of swindling are numerous.

They steal in syndicates and salaries, as do the bigger companies, of course. And they steal also when it comes to paying at death.

The father—acting in good faith—had given his age as forty, or fifty, when the policy was issued. The agent of the company is instructed to tell the family that the FATHER LIED. His real age—and they can prove it—was forty-one, or fifty-one.

They tell the family that SUCH A MONSTROUS LIE makes the policy worthless. But they offer to pay half, or a third—"out of pity for a poor family." And the family, ignorant of the law, unable to fight, with the rent coming due and the bread winner dead, takes what is given.

That is a type of the "methods" of industrial insurance.

The poor live in coffinlike tenements, robbed through extortionate rents.

They save to pay insurance that they may have coffins to be buried in—and they are swindled through extortionate insurance rates. Twice, three times and FOUR TIMES TOO MUCH the insurance companies collect in premiums from the poorer people. They swindle the bread winner while he lives and pays. They swindle the family when he dies and it comes the turn of the company to pay.

It is to be hoped that when Mr. Hughes in his investigation shall reach these cowardly swindlers of the poor he will make a thorough exposure of the villainous rascality, and smooth the road to the penitentiary for more than one of the sharks that have robbed the poorest and most industrious—heartlessly exploiting a workingman's desire to protect his family, or to insure decent burial for the children and the wife.

The Long Life of the Confirmed Invalid

An eminent physician, being asked the best way to insure a long life, once answered: "Become afflicted with a fatal disease in early youth."

The response passed for a pleasantry, notwithstanding its obvious seriousness. But now comes the head of a life insurance company testifying that "sub-standard insurance," or the insuring of people unable to pass the prescribed medical tests, is highly profitable; indeed, that they had "done better with it financially than with the regular business."

Of course, the explanation of both the doctor's and the insurance man's point of view is clear enough. Men are killed by carelessness, by overeating or drinking, by overexertion or the wanton violation of the simplest rules of hygiene. Warned of illness, or physical weakness in youth, a man watches himself carefully, leads a rational life, and, avoiding the errors of the person proud of his physical well-being, becomes strong in age, while others grow weak or pass away.

President Roosevelt, to-day a model of manly vigor, ascribes much of his strength and virility to the fact that he was forced to overcome early weakness by exercise, open-air life and a sensible regimen.

If the sickly can be made strong and long lived by sensible living, what would be the lifetime of the race should those naturally robust be equally careful of their constitutions? It is a pleasing speculation, but will ever remain in the field of speculation only; for the tendency of the strong to abuse their strength is as old as the days of Samson.

Little Editorials from the People

IS UNCLE SAM AFRAID OF THE SULTAN?

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Jews in many parts of the country have been holding services in memory of John Hay. Their tribute to the great Secretary of State for his fairness in the treatment of members of their race and for his insistence that other governments treat them fairly is sincere and enthusiastic. Among other things Secretary Hay secured for naturalized Russian Jews the right to go back to Russia and receive the same treatment as other American citizens regardless of the local laws affecting the Jews. This was, indeed, a great gain for civilization.

Why did our late Secretary not do the same for our loyal and faithful citizens of Armenian extraction? Why does not his successor insist for the free entrance of our Armenian citizens into Turkey?

NOT A PESSIMIST

W. R. Hearst, Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

After reading the editorial written by you some days ago, I felt that the friend who desires something on the emptiness of life lacks everything that tends to make life full.

"Why do we come and why do we go?" you ask. We come for a definite purpose, and go when our work is supposed to be accomplished.

Why is the life of man a puzzle any more than the life of a tree? The tree must bear fruit, else it is destroyed. The tree grows for a definite purpose, likewise man.

Something never existed for nothing. Man, I believe, is something. He is here as an atom to complete a mass. Some men—nearly all at the present time—have degenerated to such a low level, caused by alcohol, that they are unfit for anything but an aimless, shiftless life. It is that class that howls at the emptiness of life.

Oh, those pessimistic thoughts of fervid brains, with what do they coincide?

"Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal.
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul."

Make no attempt to write on life's emptiness, please. There is no emptiness in life. When you write, write truth. A thousand are looking for truth, where one seeks pessimism.

Common Errors of Speech Would Not Exist if Public School Teachers Did Their Duties

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

IT is claimed by the average American that our public schools are wonderful places for children to obtain the foundation of an education, but one who listens to the conversation of eight-tenths of the pupils who have graduated from our public schools will be led to wonder why so many important bricks are missing in this foundation.

Almost any child in higher classes of these schools can tell you the source of the large rivers and bound all the States and give the answer to problems in algebra.

Many of them will recite the rules governing correct speech, but not one in fifteen will be able to speak three sentences correctly without the interpolation of slip-shod or ungrammatical phrases.

Here are a few of the unpardonable expressions which are to be heard on all sides and in all localities from the lips of children in public schools and even in high schools in America:

"Have came," "I seen it," "I done it," "He done it," "I ain't got nothin'," "I ain't goin'," "Has went."

Listen to the conversation of the next bevy of school children you encounter and you will hear all these expressions and a score more as objectionable. Yet it is possible these very speakers have carried off the prizes on examination day for excellence in grammar.

English Necessary

IT always sounds most inconsistent when children who murder the English language in every sentence state the fact that they attend "grammar school."

There is absolutely no excuse for any teacher who sends out such scholars after even one term of instruction.

The first matter of importance in education is decently correct language.

If the teacher makes this fact sufficiently impressive every day of the school year the children will understand the necessity of applying the rules they learn to the language they use.

Every school room ought to contain a large bulletin board with sentences like those quoted above, written in large letters and headed the "Unpardonable sins of speech."

No day should pass without a few words of comment from the teacher regarding the vulgarity and offensiveness of such expressions, and the glaring hallmark of ignorance which they carry.

Many of the children hear these phrases at home, but the influence of the school should be strong enough to overcome this example.

It would be did each teacher do his duty.

When children go forth into the world to take part in the activities of life they do not offend their fellow creatures if they happen to be somewhat ignorant regarding geographical boundaries; no one is annoyed if they left school with but a poor comprehension of higher mathematics, and if they are faulty in the knowledge of anatomy no one of their associates will suffer in consequence.

Perfect Diction

BUT the man or woman who goes forth among his kind using ungrammatical and vulgar and ignorant language does offend his associates and wrongs them by his bad example.

People who have never been given the advantages of school and who have been such slaves of circumstances that they could not even enjoy the association of those who gave the example of correct speech are excusable for slips in utterance, but no graduate of a public school is excusable, and no teacher in these schools is entitled to the position unless he makes grammatical language the most important part of his instruction to the children under his influence.

Absolute perfection in diction is not expected of any school child. Stilted or pedantic language is to be avoided, but the application of the rules governing double negatives and past participles and other simple laws which mean the avoidance of the commonest and most painful mistakes in speech should be made of the utmost importance in our schools.

At present these matters seem of the last and least consideration with teachers or pupils, if we are to judge by the language used by the graduates of our public institutions of learning.

Virtuous and vicious every man must be;
Few in the extreme, but all in the degree.

POPE.

THE ROLLING STONE AND THE MOSS BACK

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner

Jim Jackson was a rolling stone—
His father worshipped him.

"Well, anyway," he used to say.
"There is no moss on Jim."

One day Jim got a job, and then
He neither ate nor drank

Until he'd written home that he
Was working in a bank.
